REGULARS

22 NEWS

Insinuating themselves into various computer shows and plying software publishers with cheap alcohol, our sinister agents return fat with information. THIS PLEASES US.

64 COMPLETE CONTROL

Once more your embarrassing inadequacy at games leads you to mumbly consult our resident tips therapist. We expect you even apply under assumed names, and pity you.

72 BACK ISSUES

Arm yourself with a full complement of our Whatever Happened To features and mock with uncleavable authority the saps who take those things seriously.

77 SUBSCRIPTIONS

Share in the last year of AMIGA POWER and save money to spend upon another unwitting subsidiary of our evil mega-global corporate paymasters.

84 LETTERS

Launch a career in journalism by impressing us enough to award you irregular work. Or complain that we don't carry printer reviews and see your address passed on to the Exalted Grand High Wizard of the International Pet-Hating League.

88 THE GARDEN THAT TIME FORGOT

Somewhere in these reader ads we have concealed a secret phrase that could win you £1,000 of software. Possibly.

90 THE BEHIND MEN

Events are not random. Accidents do not occur. Here is the true reason for all things.

EXILE A1200

Gone is the gentlemanly saviour in the space suit. This time the fate of the world rests on the T-shirted shoulders of an unpleasantly barbered thug. Page 46

MAN UTD THE DOUBLE

Every 1940s film series had to have an episode where the hero encountered his evil doppelganger. Inevitably the leading actor played both parts, aided by the back of the key grip's similar head. Page 44

It doesn't work on an A500. Or an A600 either. It's uninspiring on an A1200. But - oh! - on Amiga Shopper's A4000 it's... well, find out. Page 40

SUPER LOOPZ

The people behind Bubble and Squeak help up an old puzzle game from the pavement, dust it down and straighten its tie, make cheerfully inane comments about not needing to worry and it being nothing a hot cup of tea wouldn't cure, and do a very bad thing. Page 50

TOP 100

Unlearn all you know. Dismiss all that has preceded. We applaud the 100 (count 'em!) best games ever. Page 11

OVER 4.6

PENCE PER PAGE.

LEST WE FORGET

Before the future (that is almost here) loading games involved pictures of disks. Page 36

SHADOW FIGHTER WINNERS

We demanded new fighters of you. AND YOU DELIVERED, albeit largely poorly. Page 58.

WIN A CD32!

You can keep biscuits in its disc caddy and play music. Page 54

PAUL WOULD JUST LIKE TO SAY: "It's so very."

CAM WOULD ALSO LIKE TO SAY: "And you haven't. Nyaa-nyaa-nyaa."

Hanging limply from the cover of the issue are two repellently blue disks. They dangle unhappily due to the tremendous weight of demos and games spread upon them, and cheap sellotape. Owners of AP49's CD edition need not, of course, have read this.

INTRODUCING DISK

A fiendishly tricky level from Rasputin's four-player Ascension/Frictative Freefall Game Of Champions. With a secret round of Joust.

Othello Goes Biological. Like Hamlet Goes Business, but with slightly more emphasis on (once again) four-player engagement.

Boston Bomb Club Doesn't Go French. Compel small coloured balls to fill holes more efficiently than your opponent.

Two siege catapults, a mountain, a sinister penguin, two sets of styrofoam, glass and real cows. LET BATTLE COMMENCE.

WHICH DID YOU CHOOSE?

Ever striving for fresh experience, AMIGA POWER has for one month only despatched CD editions of itself to all corners of the world. Should you have bought such a magazine, you will see not those things above, but these below.

The best game ever, except (for some piddling technicality) for Sensi. Fact.

Cows have never been this much fun. Fact.

A trio that is but a small number of the games and demos nestling upon the AMIGA POWER CD. And that's not counting the (Sort Of) Interactive Top 100. Or the Valhalla song. Oh no.

AMIGA POWER MAY 1995

disk 49

YOUR DISK AND YOU

READ THIS BIT FIRST OR NO-ONE WILL TAKE ANY NOTICE OF YOU WHEN YOU SAY THAT YOUR DISK DOESN'T WORK.

● You've only got 512K of memory on your Amiga? Blimey, that's a bit stupid, isn't it? Go and buy an expansion RIGHT NOW.

● To load any of the games, all you have to do is switch off your machine, insert the disk, and switch your machine back on again.

● An options menu will appear. Simply follow the instructions to load the game of your choice.

● Just to be on the safe side, though, the on-screen instructions say that you should press the appropriate function key to make your selection.

● You'll have to reset your machine in order to play one of the other demos. When you do so, simply follow the instructions above.

● Remember to keep the disk you are playing your game from in the drive at all times. And remember – switching the machine off for 20 seconds or so before loading a new program will help prevent disks being infected by stray viruses.

● Have a good time.

OH NO! SOMETHING WENT WRONG!

● Are you sure?

● Try all that stuff again, making sure you've disconnected any peripherals the program might not 'like', such as external drives.

● If your disk fails to load, then pop it in a padded envelope, along with a letter explaining the problem and an SAE, to:

AMIGA POWER Disk 49 Returns
Discopy Labs
PO Box 21
Daventry
NN11 5BU

● We're really hoping that you're reading this bit, because it's quite important: please don't send your disks to us at the AMIGA POWER office. We really don't know how to fix dodgy disks, and we'll just throw 'em straight in the bin. So send them to Discopy. Please.

BASE JUMPERS

Authors: Rasputin

Work frequently ground to a halt during the production of AP47 as we gathered round a monitor to indulge in bonkers-mad four player matches of this game. Sort of a cross between Die Hard and Terminal Velocity, the idea's to "Bruce" your way up to the top of a skyscraper as fast as you can and once up there, "Wesley" your way back down again in the shortest possible time by pulling your 'chute at the last possible moment.

Being a Rasputin game, there's loads of odd little sub-games, which are activated by collecting letters or the coloured blocks hidden in off the beaten track rooms. On the way up, coloured buttons turn off force shield, and dropping off the bottom of the screen loses you points, not lives. On the way down, hitting pipes, flagpoles and, of course, the pavement, kills you in as graphically unpleasant a way such a cute game can muster. JD gave it 70% in his review, commenting that it was, amongst other things, too expensive, and yet this demo is FREE, making it a completely desirable possession.

Author: Gary Dunne

Not entirely dissimilar to Silmaril's Boston Bomb Club, Toobz is a puzzler that requires you to think on your feet. Use the mouse to rotate the points, and try to get the correctly coloured balls to go into the right bases. Against the clock. White balls count as anything, and clear balls act as bonuses. On some levels you can ditch the wrong colours down the plug, on others you can change them by passing them through the colour-changer. Obviously. Later on, everything gets horribly complicated when there isn't a plug, when random direction points appear and when you can start and stop balls by putting them in sidings. We approve of this, as indeed would the mighty CYCLISTS OF THE APOCALYPSE.

TOOBZ

INFECTION

Authors: Digital Wizardry

Looking for good PD is like digging for gold, I'd imagine. Only without getting your fingernails dirty. Or ruining the local ecology. Or taking part in the mass suffering, misery and starvation caused by a massive influx of poorly-equipped prospectors into a harsh environment, such as the series of tragic events that formed the Yukon goldrush in 1849. But back to that gold analogy.

When you dig for gold, you can go for ages and get just mud, and then every so often you hit, quite literally, gold. Similarly, searching through PD libraries, you're forced to endure the useless scum to find 'special' games such as Infection.

It's a variant of Othello, but instead of trapping pieces between two of yours, you infect all pieces adjacent to the one you've chosen. You don't put down pieces either, but opt either to make an existing one reproduce onto an adjacent square, or to move two squares away in any direction. Up to four people can play, the swirly squares turn everything horizontal and vertical from that square your colour, and the computer players are pretty clever. It's fab.

RING WAR

Authors: ASDG

We've just discovered a new use for the Apple Macs that we write the mag on. After years of having nothing but Tetris clones and card games to play on them, it's suddenly become a popular games platform. There's an astonishing Doom game pathetically named Marathon, and some great versions of old arcade games. We were playing a version of Star Castle only the other day and saying things like "Wouldn't it be great if we had a version for our coverdisk?" and then, mere moments later, Ring War turned up. Life's spooky like that.

The ship in the middle's protected by rings which you can shoot, but if you destroy an entire ring, it'll reform. Also, if the ship can get a clear shot at you through the gaps, it'll blast you, so the idea's to create a small gap and to take your shot first. Simple? Well, no, but then again, life so very often isn't.

If you're playing Ring War on an A500+ or an A600, there's a slight chance something odd might happen, although it doesn't always do it, and quite why it happens we're not really sure. If you have to wait more than about five seconds for the game to kick in, try pressing some keys. If it still won't load, then reboot, but persevere – it WILL load eventually. Honest.

Q-BIC

Author: Ronald Weeserik

Or to be more precise, Q-Bert minus those tedious copyright problems. Bounce around the pyramid to turn the squares different colours, avoid the falling balls and lure the purple snake to its death by letting it get close and then jumping on the spinning disks that transport your little fellow to the top of the pyramid. The problem with Q-Bert games has always been getting used to the odd controls, but here, press F1 to use up, down, left, right and F2 to use the far more user-friendly diagonals.

Lure the snake to its death.

Bounce like a spring lamb.

COW WARS

Author: Chris Richards

If only Cow Wars was as playable as it was amusing, eh readers? It's a Tanx type game where, in a mediaevally cruel-to-animals sort of way, you hurl cows from mobile ballistas over the central mountain.

Power and trajectory are all that you can control, but if you can manage to avoid hitting the huge, floating penguin in the sky, it's worth trying to get the cows to pass each other in mid-air, as they'll exchange social pleasantries. It really is better than it sounds. Honestly.

Author: David Papworth

Remember David Papworth's stunning complete games Super Obliteration and Atom Smasher from AP coverdisks of yore? We do, and in fact are still playing them, and jolly good fun they still are. This addition to the Papworth collection is a reworking of the Atari VCS game Kaboom, and for some reason doesn't always work for the first game on an A1200, but once you've lost the game, will work on the second. Odd we know. Why, we don't know. Anyway, collect the bombs – OR DIE. It really is as simple as that.

MAD BOMBER

GRAVITY FORCE 2

Authors: Jens Andersson
& Jan Kronqvist

Let it be known that the one (count it!) reason why Sensible Soccer beat Gravity Force 2 to the top spot in the AMIGA POWER All-Time 100 was because there's no one-player option in GF2. So, all that prevented two Swedish school kids from producing the most flawless, fun-filled game OF ALL TIME is some fancy algorithms that'd make the computer fly a little ship around the screen. Tsk.

Be like us – always play games with nine lives and full shields, so you can hit walls (or tunnel through them) and survive. Levels where you stick to the walls aren't much fun, so avoid the Metallic and Lego levels and stick with the Arctic and Grassland ones. Freefall bombs are the silent long-range Weapon Of Champions, and a skillful player can drop one the entire length of the level and strike the opponent on their nose cone. Try Beat The Rabbit and The Tower on Grasslands or Snow

Castle on the Arctic levels for the finest shooty game of all time. Play it, and then play it again. For a year, just like we've been doing.

YOUR CD AND YOU

Hello CD32 owners, and let's just get one thing out of the way before you all write in. We were under the impression that there was going to be a CD version and a disk version for the same price. However, at the very last moment, the STEEL-LINED JACKBOOT OF CORPORATE OPPRESSION descended from above to CRUSH OUR WILL and UNILATERALLY IMPOSE the pound price rise on the CD version. The mightiest beings ever to create a computer magazine we may be, but against the faceless tyranny of our despotic multinational over-fuhrers, we have little power, a fact that gnaws at the exposed nerve-ends of our very being.

But anyway, whenever you choose a demo or PD game, you've quite annoyingly got to reset the machine to get back to the menu, but as long as you're in a menu, you can always backtrack using the blue button. So that's all right then.

JETSTRIKE

Author: Rasputin

It's a bonkers game with a bonkers control system, and despite our messing around with it loads, a bonkers problem. If it locks up before the start of the game (as it did on one of our CD32s, but not the other) then go to OPTIONS and change it to FAST and it'll work. Probably.

The controls are a bit odd to start off with, but well worth getting the hang of.

GREEN: Shift key. Changes function to the one in brackets.

BLUE: Fire right weapon (Autothrottle toggle).

RED: Fire guns.

PAUSE: Eject.

DOWN: Rotate clockwise.

RIGHT SHOULDER: Throttle up (Look around).

ATOM SMASHER

Author: David Papworth

A cross between Pengo and Dyna Blaster, Atom Smasher sets you (and a friend) the task of squashing various nasties by hurling blocks at them. There are friendly and competitive modes in the menu, but don't let these fool you; they're to do with points and in both modes it's possible to kill (accidentally or otherwise) the other player. And Madonna's in there too for some reason.

EXTREME VIOLENCE

Author: Simon Green

Long-time readers of AMIGA POWER will no doubt recognise the name Green as that of our shadily extra-terrestrial production editor Dave Green, and there's a good reason for this. The young Simon was hatched from the very same brood as Dave, and several years later went on to write this oddly compulsive two player shoot-'em up.

In a storyline similar to current video smashes Hard Target and Surviving The Game, you search the randomly created maze for powerful weapons and/ or your opponent. And then kill him. Simple, really. Incidentally, have you noticed that although Van Damme gets plenty of opportunities to kick people in Hard Target, Ice T's never given an opportunity to 'jam' in his film. Another terrible movie-crime goes unpunished.

COOKIE

Author: Richard Langford

Avoiding potential legal litigation (a problem we on AMIGA POWER have to face on more-or-less a monthly basis) Richard Langford thoughtfully pointed out that this isn't his game at all, and is in fact a perfect Amiga conversion of the Spectrum game from Ultimate Play The Game. The idea (as all aging Spec-heads will know) is to get all of the ingredients into the bowl, and all of the trash into the bins, by firing little puffs of flour.

Actually, this isn't a completely perfect conversion, as the characters don't change colour when they get close to each other. Shame that.

SUPER SKIDMARKS

Authors: Acid

Cows! Wheels! Caravans! Go! Go!! GO!!!

PLUS! WHILE AWAY ENTIRE MINUTES WITH THE... AMIGA POWER (SORT OF) INTERACTIVE TOP 100

When it came to trying to fill an entire CD with interesting stuff, it was immediately apparent to us that games and demos and things would still leave a lot of unploughed silvery acreage down on Cover CD Farm. Optonica, who compiled and cut the CD, graciously took a huge slice of capacity off our hands and used it to plug themselves, and the very best of luck to them. Even this mammoth promotional campaign still left us with space, so we chocked it out (a little) with the AMIGA POWER (SORT OF) INTERACTIVE TOP 100.

Be happy in the knowledge that the coverdisk-owning proles have none of this. Instead of just repeating what's in the mag, the blurbs on each game are longer, more involved and just a little bit more 'special' than their paper-bound relatives.

AND! PLAY THESE FAMOUS GAMES!

As all of creation is consumed by the eternal flames of perdition, only a few games will be judged worthy of salvation. They are the games listed in the AMIGA POWER All-Time Top 100, which we list for you on the pages that follow. And this time (this time) we mean it.

But remember:

- The AMIGA POWER All-Time Top 100 is based purely on the irrational opinions of the AP team. These are THE GAMES WE PLAY.
- It is therefore the mightiest Top 100 ever assembled.
- Do not be fooled by half-witted imitations.

Sensible SOCCER

INTERNATIONAL EDITION

SENSIBLE SOCCER

◆ (Sensible/Renegade)

Phweee... Bang. Phut-phut-phut-phut-phut. Bang. Bang. Shwoosh... Pop-pop-pop-pop. Sizzle. Fixz. Bang.

Those were some fireworks to celebrate Sensible Soccer being the official Best Game On The Amiga. For the third year running. Okay, SWOS got a higher score, and on paper is the better game. But the AMIGA POWER All-Time Top 100 is a deeply personal list, and it's the original Sensi that we play the most. (And anyway, we can do whatever we want.)

The little men running around... the crowd cheering... the fluidity of the passing... the one-player game that's as good as the two-player game... the way that the more you play it the better you get, even if you've already been playing it for HALF YOUR LIFE... Everything about Sensible Soccer is just right, explaining why, not only did you vote it number one in our Reader's Top 100 last year, you're still buying it three years after it originally came out.

Just as Britain currently exhales millions of litres of hot air every day tediously reminiscing about old children's TV programmes like The Clangers, one day they'll sit around complaining that computer games aren't as good as they used to be. And they'll almost certainly be right.

GRAVITY FORCE 2

NE (Lars and Jens)

Much of 20th Century Britain's pent-up frustration could be relieved by the legalisation of duelling, using épées. Then, if an argument could not be resolved through dialogue, rather than simply going home and fuming, the protagonists would physically attack each other. The victor would then have the satisfaction of spearing his opponent through the heart, and the loser would be dead. At AMIGA POWER, though, we play Gravity Force 2, as featured on AP39's coverdisk. It's incredibly simple: two spaceships, controlled by rotate and thrust keys, influenced by gravity, armed with a choice of weapons (although purists will stick with guns/bombs), and operated by players 1 and 2. But this simplicity leaves you free to hone your playing style to an art form, and leaves no room for accusations of cheating. If you can find a worthy opponent, you will NEVER get bored of playing Gravity Force 2. It is The Game Of Gentlemen. In fact, we deliberated for several hours over whether it should actually be number one, until Cam said: "Well, if I was washed up alone on a desert island with an Amiga, Gravity Force 2 is the game I'd choose. No. Hang on."

GUARDIAN

NE (Acid)

Heaven is probably a place filled with landers, baiters, mutants, swarms, pods, tanks, patrol boats, helicopters and flying saucers, all zipping around extremely quickly in 3D. And when you die, we tend to think you'll be given a triangular spaceship armed with upgradable weapons, along with a number of lives depending on how nice you've been to people. You'll then be able to spend eternity careering around a seemingly endless series of worlds, zapping baddies, skimming between buildings and performing impressive flip manoeuvres. That'd be great. Although Custard Doughnut Heaven might be quite good too.

▼ (Sensible)

Although we respect the sequel, it's the original Cannon Fodder that we love the most. It really does prove that the best games start, not with a group of men in suits in a boardroom saying: "Right, we need a 'product' for this 'quarter', who's got an idea?", but rather with someone sitting at a computer and tinkering about with things. In the case of Cannon Fodder, the game clearly began with a group of little men following the cursor around. They then became soldiers armed with guns and grenades, and some baddies were added in, and a legend was born. Even though it's a finishable, level-based game, it's such fun that we play it enthusiastically to this day - especially Cam, who seems to have become irrevocably entwined with it.

▼ (Ubi Soft)

They say two's company, three's a crowd. But they also say the more the merrier. Tch. Them, eh? Perhaps if they were to play Dynablaster their confusion would be alleviated. It's a dreadfully dull game with one player, significantly better with two, comfortably superior with three, altogether greater with four, and best of all with five. In fact, with five players, Dynablaster is impossibly entertaining, as you and four pals dynamite your way around a maze, attempting to destroy each other without getting caught in your own evil explosions.

MICRO MACHINES

▲ (Codemasters)

Perhaps it's as well that F1GP has disappeared from the top 10, because that way we don't have to write quite so much about it. If we had to try to find yet another way of saying how great it is, we might conceivably faint. Instead, here's Micro Machines, which, even with the arrival of the staggering Slidmarks 2, is now our driving game of choice. No other driving game gives you the chance to race around all the rooms of the house. No other driving game allows you to race tanks which can shoot at each other. No other driving game forces you to make such critical decisions about the pros and cons of shortcuts. And so on. We only wish the Codies would stop grinning for a moment and bring us MM2.

MONKEY ISLAND 1 & 2

▲ (Lucas Arts)

These games are good because they've been created by genuinely intelligent, funny people - people who, if they weren't writing computer games, would probably be scripting hugely successful TV series, or designing exciting new chocolate bars. Not only do the Monkey Islands look great and work slickly, but they've got imaginative puzzles and funny jokes, so you'll play to the end because you want to, not because you feel you ought to get your money's worth. And - NEW! - this year we're lumping both games together, because it seemed a bit silly the other way.

KNIGHTS OF THE SKY

▼ (Microprose)

Had Mark Twain's life been time-shifted forwards by 30 years, it's likely his Connecticut Yankee would have lost no time in introducing bi-planes to the court of King Arthur. Sir Lancelot, Sir Gawain, Sir Tristram and their chums could then have humanely destroyed their horses and taken to the skies in these highly entertaining, though barely airworthy machines, much as we do on a regular basis courtesy of Knights Of The Sky. It's a fantastically atmospheric game and, in two-player serial link mode, the closest thing yet to Doom - but on the Amiga.

SYNDICATE

▲ (Bullfrog)

Syndicate has been lent a new urgency this year now that AMIGA POWER has itself been absorbed by a sinister global megacorporation. We've therefore been playing it a lot more, practising the art of lurking in the shadows wearing long overcoats with suspicious bulges in them, and have nudged it upwards in our Top 100 accordingly.

10

PINBALL ILLUSIONS

NE (Digital Illusions/21st Century)

Pinball's a stupid game. But, if you really must play it, Pinball Illusions seems like the most sensible way - much better than going into an unpleasant pub and being glowered at by men who spill lager down your trousers. It's only got three tables, against Dreams and Fantasies four, but Illusions' tables are the most action-packed yet, with features all over the place, that entertaining LED display at the top and, of course, multiball. Which is perhaps why the likes of Steve and Paul have played it until its devil-derived music has dislodged plaster from the walls.

SHADOW FIGHTER

NE (Gremlin)

With the arrival of this, every other Amiga game cowered in terror in dusty corners. You need only the best. And this is it.

11

12

▼ (Bitmap Brothers/Renegade)

Once much favoured, the new AP team find that there's now 11 games they'd rather play than the excellent footy-with-fists classic, which Cam thinks is a great shame indeed.

CIVILIZATION

▲ (Microprose)

A game that takes 600 years to play? In game time though. Natch.

PUTTY SQUAD

NE (System 3)

We know it's great, and you would too, if System 3 ever got around to releasing it. The fiends.

NE (Binary Asylum)

Relentlessly and accurately likened to Virus and Desert Strike, Binary's first game scores highly in durability, fun and curved sphere technology.

PGA EUROPEAN TOUR GOLF

NE (Ocean)

Quite literally better than the real thing, it's a golf game of excellent pedigree. Like the other PGA game, only in Europe.

▼ (Domark)

A superfast two-player version of Vroom that prays devoutly before the high altar of FUN. All hail F1!

▼ (Westwood/Virgin)

Real-time blend of Sim City and Battle Isle. Some day all war games will be this good.

D/GENERATION

▲ (Mindscape)

Given new life on the CD32, it's an ageing isometric puzzler featuring, curiously, a motorcycle courier and a large office block.

SUPER STARDUST

NE (Bloodhouse/Team 17)

Asteroids. With more levels, that tunnel section and numerous monsters.

NO SECOND PRIZE

▲ (Thalion)

An impossibly overlooked high-octane polygon graphic motorbike racer, complete with odd mouse control.

20

DEFENDER

▲ (PD/Activision)

Arcade-perfect Defender. Apart from the laser effects. Tch.

THE SETTLERS

19

▲ (Blue Byte/Kompart)

An indescribable blend of Civilization, Populous, castles, corn, mines and little piggies. A bit like being God, but without the responsibilities.

THE CHAOS ENGINE

▲ (Bitmap Brothers/Renegade)

Steampunk, Gauntlet for the '90s. Sometimes graphics DO count.

HEAD OVER HEELS

24

▲ (Ocean)

An enduring Spectrum conversion that still manages to enthrall despite the medieval graphics.

STUNT CAR RACER

▲ (Kixx)

Sir Geoff Crammond's no-frills game of fast cars, narrow rollercoaster tracks and sudden death. Still one of the best linked games around.

26

▼ (Sales Curve)

A platformer with a heart (albeit a pink silk one with face round the edges) two top gimmicks (magic ladders and magic thump-sticks) and some sickly sweet gonk-type characters. Really though, it's much better than it sounds.

27

▲ (Acid/Vision)

Cross Defender with a barrow load of rotten fruit and you've got Overkill - a graphically superior blaster with organic aliens frequently and messily going 'splat.'

29

JETSTRIKE CD32

NE (Rasputin)

Completely barking arcade 'flight sim' that scores low for realism but high on explosions, weaponry and plain, honest, good-fun-to-play-iness.

28

RAINBOW ISLANDS

30

▼ (Ocean)

The slide continues. Once controversially voted the number one game in AP1, it's now slumped a massive 24 places, partly due to classic arcade fan Stuart Campbell leaving, but mainly because there's a whole heap of games we'd rather play. Retro's okay if there's nothing new and impressive, and the Amiga's had numerous prosperous years since this appeared.

33

PINBALL FANTASIES

▼ (Digital Illusions /21st Century)

Only two of the four tables in Fantasies are worth playing, but it's STILL at 33. That's how good those two are. Oh yes.

SUPER SKIDMARKS

NE (Acid)

Bouncing, sliding, crashing, flopping racing game viewed, not surprisingly, from overhead. Featuring a cinemascope mode over two monitors and up to 8 players, this has got to be the most gregarious game in existence.

SIM CITY

35

▼ (Maxis)

It's Sim City.

36

▼ (Audiogenic)

Part adventure, part arcade, part inertia-heavy, gravity-laden physics sim, Exile succeeds on levels other games haven't even begun to use yet.

F1 GP

▼ (Microprose)

A mammoth dive for F1GP. After prolonged analysis, we realised that although we admire its manifold options, its attention to detail and its ability to cater for players of any calibre, it just doesn't appeal to us as much as other, trashier, more arcadey racing games. Fans of F1GP may prepare their vitriolic attacks now.

SUPER LEAGUE MANAGER

NE (Audiogenic)

A friendly-faced management game set in a mythical world, where players are described rather than listed as stats. Fun (if you like that sort of thing) AND including Wembley International Soccer.

ASTEROIDS

▼ (PD/Kris Schulte)

Arcade-perfect Asteroids. Cool.

40

EMPIRE SOCCER

NE (Graftgold/Empire)

Ignoring the tedium of realism, the much underrated Empi takes a dazzling arcade approach to the game, complete with bonkers power-ups and special moves. Its flashy, crowd-pleasing moves still remain one of the software industry's best kept secrets.

TETRIS PRO

▲ (PD)

The best version of Tetris there is. It will suffice until someone converts Super Puyo Puyo.

41

SABRE TEAM A1200

▲ (Krisalis)

First there was Rebelstar, and then there was another one of it. Then someone pinched it and put it on the Amiga and called it Sabre Team. The takey-turny, ranged-weapon, grenade-rolling, hostage-sacrificing Warsame Of Champions.

43

NE (Gametek)

Beyond morality, beyond linearity, beyond the truly terrible controls, lies the Good Point-and-Click Game That Is Not Monkey Island. That is Bloodnet. Vampirism meets cyberpunk meets sinister conspiracy of champions. And you can shoot anybody you darn well like without repercussions.

THEME PARK

NE (Electronic Arts)

It's Kingdom for the 90s.

48

LOTUS ESPRIT TURBO CHALLENGE 2

NE (Gremlin)

The good one.

54

▼ Microprose

Flight sim equivalent of a scary Punch And Judy show as you play poppy-uppy behind hills with 20mm tri-barrelled Vulcan cannon and cursedly competent enemies. Sneaky but great, like Peter Lorre.

45

HIRED GUNS

▲ (Psygnosis)

Four-player Dungeon Master With Guns and the most antagonistic puppies ever to have been seen in a computer game.

LIBERATION

▼ (Mindscape)

Dungeon Master In A City, with random plot generation and vehicle-eye views aplenty. Expect draughts to pluck at your clothing as the game SUCKS YOU IN LIKE A POWERFULLY-LUNGED OPERATIC ARTISTE WITH A BIG STRAW.

47

ON THE BALL WORLD CUP

NE (Daze)

A landmark football management game which replaces numbers and stats with 'human interest' scenes as your players fall in love, beat up journalists and get appallingly ('Sunk' - Ed) on the night before the Big Match. It's amazing how much better this makes what is after all just another competent footy management game, and astonishing that it took them this long to come up with the idea.

49

SUPER HANG ON

▲ (US Gold)

It is ironic that in these dismal days of dark licences, swollen teams of highly-paid cretins cannot equal the achievement of one bloke hacking out an arcade conversion. Super Hang On splits the shins of almost every other into-the-screen racing game. Only its two-player mode lets it down, because there isn't one.

42

NE (Renegade)

We stand firm behind the outrageously inflated mark awarded to this bug-ridden hash-up of Sensi. WE ARE ALWAYS RIGHT.

▲ (PD)

Robotron, down to the two joystick movement/firing option (using two Bugs, natch) but peopled with Minter's quadruped chums. Furiously intense, explosively infuriating, monumentally exhilarating and optionally terribly rude, it's everything the gaming anxiety that was Smash TV was not.

BANSHEE

NE (Core)

If SWIV featured steampunk prop-planes, superhumanly dutiful ground troops, rain, elegantly distinguishable power-ups, a determinedly Swedish idiom and shoot-upable civilians, it would be Banshee. Core wimped out and censored the harsher violence (exploding polar bears and the like) but you can switch it back on by entering MARY WHITEHOUSE on the high-score table.

51

FURY OF THE FURRIES

▲ (Mindscape)

Relentlessly French Lost Vikings clone in which your single Fury is blessed with multiple powers (instead of having to use a particular character for a specific task as in Vikings, which meant you had to complete a level once for each character). A puzzle game, of course, but a terribly amusing one.

52

LEMMINGS 2

▼ (Psygnosis)

The good one.

55

56 VIRUS

▲ (Firebird)

Virus is like that bit in the fanatically nice Granpa where Mark Baker's Three Knights fight a dragon on a patchwork quilt - BUT WITH MOUSE CONTROL. Trust us.

ROADKILL

NE (Vision)

Get ready. Showtime. Take his life. Destroy him. Get the jackpot. Get the super jackpot. Rowwwdkeee!

DESERT STRIKE

58

▼ (Electronic Arts)

Isometric Seek And Destroy but without the talking wingmen.

FLASHBACK

▼ (US Gold)

Classy polygon platform game that conceals its Frenchness with great success.

60 CARRIER COMMAND

▲ (Ocean)

Benchmark strat-in-a-boat affair where the key to success is to besiege islands, kill their inhabitants and seize control of their armament factories. And in real life, too.

LAMBORGHINI AMERICAN CHALLENGE

▼ (Titus)

The into-the-screen car racing game which escaped from Super Hang On's clutches with only slightly bruised shins.

ELITE

RE (Firebird)

Trading. Pirates. Police. ECM jammers. Refugees. Narcotics. The Blue Danube. Save/load commander? Hyperspace in 10 seconds. Nine. Eight. Thargoids. Game over.

64

▼ (System 3)

There is only one thing better than ganging up on the computer player in this three-character beat-'em-up, and that is pressing T to make his trousers fall down.

POPULOUS 2

RE (Hit Squad)

The table-tennis continues as the volcanoey sequel displaces the original god sim.

PACIFIC ISLANDS

▼ (Empire)

Along with the exactly similar Team Yankee and War In The Gulf, the best tank game there is. You'll need both the reflexes of the arcade player and the fearsome tactical mentality of the strategist to succeed with this one, oh yes.

67

F-29 RETALIATOR

66

▼ (Ocean)

It is good because it is small.

R-TYPE 2

▼ (Activision)

The number one plus one horizontally-scrolling shoot-'em-up of all time.

65

ARCHER MACLEAN'S POOL

▼ (Virgin)

Jimmy White's Stripy Snooker, more like.

68

SEEK AND DESTROY

NE (Vision)

Overhead-view Desert Strike, except your wingman talks.

69

70

▼ Core

See Blob strain to leap up and 'out' of the screen. See Blob miss his footing and plunge, plunge, plunge through the depths inside your TV screen. Scream, Blob. Scream like a creamy bream.

71

NE (Audiogenic)

An improvement in Stupid Blue Thing's intelligence turned this very good platformer into an exceptional one. And it only took five minutes to code. There's a lesson there.

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK A500▼ (Virgin)

Pointed point-and-clicker with graphics by the King (we refer to Dave Gibbons, not Pelvis) and nary an Orc in sight. Milord. It's got a plot too.

BENEATH A STEEL SKY

KLAX

73

▲ (Domark)

"It's excellent," said AMIGA POWER's famous Sug Huntley. "It's a bit like Connect 4 except with a conveyor belt and a wheelbarrow," she continued. And that's good enough for us.

RAILROAD TYCOON

NE (Microprose)

Sid Meier puts gameplay before graphics in this superb 'create your own privatised rail network' business simulation that spawned a thousand imitators. Well - two or three anyway.

75 DUNENE (Virgin)

Graphical adventure that avoids the obvious point-and-click interface, adds an element of strategy and delivers a satisfying plot which twists and turns like a snake.

NE (Blue Byte/Kompart)

Don't let the hexes put you off. There are few better thought out war games. And you can play this against a friend in a takey-turny, split-screen mode with never a dull moment.

BATTLE ISLE '93

GEM 'X

77

▼ (Global/DMI)

The unique puzzle action, where every move you make has predictable repercussions, gets your brain steaming and there's the added incentive of Manga Women too. Coo.

HUNTER

▼ (Activision)

Blake-sim in a three-dimensional environment. Windsurfing, lorry driving and shooting other stick men are the exciting bits. It's still never been equalled.

SECOND SAMURAI

NE (Grandslam)

It's Pacman - but Pacman in 3D! And you can jump over the baddies.

PACMANIABOSTON BOMB CLUB

▲ (Silmarils/Daze)

A mythical club where the members construct tortuous mazes and roll bombs around them while being served by basque-clad beauties. It's a puzzle game. And it's French.

79

▼ (Vivid Image)

Mev Dinc's finest hour is this fantastic, two-playable platform fest with a (vaguely) oriental feel. Sub games galore, puzzles by the hundred and tidy coding.

BOB'S BAD DAY

82

▼ (The Dome/Psygnosis)

Nauseatingly good puzzler which has you moving the background rather than the eponymous character. Smile as he vomits, laugh as he chokes.

GOBLINS 3NE (Coktel Vision)

It's quirky. It's cocky. It's French. It's an adventure. It's fun. We like.

84

▲ (DID/Ocean)

A film licence that avoids the ordinary crap platform approach and chooses instead to try and re-create the movie atmos. And does it!

PREMIER MANAGER 3

NE (Gremlin)

Station's favourite game. Every option imaginable plus a couple more just for laughs. There is no more complete footy munny sim.

INFOCOM ADVENTURE COMPILATION

NE (Infocom)

Classic text-based adventures that demonstrate what a difference a plot makes. More type-and-read than point-and-click, but hours and hours of entertainment.

NE (Krisalis)

Aptly-named version of the classic Thrust. Momentum, inertia and gravity are your enemies. As well as the odd, pesky alien.

88

FLY HARDER

91

▼ Sales Curve

Big fun. It's the helicopter/jeep Game Of Champions. And it's almost too difficult in the jeep mode. We like a challenge.

NE (Augenblick)

Just like the original except the ghosts move differently and it's two-playable. Hooray! My go next.

90

ONE STEP BEYOND

92

(-) (Ocean)

Curly Colin from the Quavers ads goes platform potty in this fantastically well thought out game.

BUBBA AND STIX

94

▼ (Core)

Redneck entertainment of the highest order as backward, backwood hero Bubba meets the fantastically useful alien Stix. And uses him.

ANOTHER WORLD

96

▼ (Delphine/US Gold)

French fantasy where you're some kind of near-future secret agent type and you've got to earn a living. Somehow.

APIDYA

▼ (Team 17)

The world's first (and only?) horizontally-scrolling wasp 'em-up from ("The masterful Team 17, champions of the Amiga" - Ed).

SUPER OBLITERATION

NE (Ocean)

From the AP38 coverdisk this classic was commissioned especially for you. Run around. Shoot rocks. Don't die.

POOLS OF RADIANCE

NE (US Gold)

The first Dungeons And Dragons licence and it's a goody. Not a dungeon in sight, well-planned encounters that increase in difficulty at the right rate and lots to discover.

STARGLIDER

NE (Firebird)

Vector graphics Elite type of game without the trading but with lots of explosive action.

93

95

NE (Mindscape)

Dungeons, dialogue, in-depth plot and monster-bashing aplenty in this better-than-average RPGer.

100

NE (Sensible)

More of the same fun as Cannon Fodder, only less so.

AND THE MORAL OF THE STORY IS...

Regular readers of the All-Time Top 100 will have noticed a DEPARTURE FROM THE NORM. Instead of this year's list printed meaningfully alongside last year's, we've this time gone 'the whole hog' (as our transatlantic cousins are wont to say) and reproduced all five lists. Why? So you can see for yourself the rise and fall, pitch and yaw, tussle and tossle of the Top 100 through the ages. And also because we'll have closed the mag down by 1996 rather than see our evil mega-global paymasters agonisingly draw out its life with 36-page issues. (Er, possibly. — Ed)

The 1995 edition of the APATTOH reflects the current staff's preference for multi-player games: 40 of the 100 feature two- (or more) player head-to-head (or takey-turny competitive) modes, with seven of those in the top ten. The departure of Stuart Campbell also heralds the collapse of all those monumentally obscure games he maintained were great but which no one else had actually seen working. And Steve and Paul have finally managed to get more than the one token footy manny game in there. Other than that, the big surprises come with Speedball 2 dropping out of the top ten for the first time, the Monkey Islands at last being recognised as a single mighty unit, the bitty 'feel' of footy/footy manny hybrid SWOS proving inferior to footy and footy manny games alike, the number two game of all time ever being a PD shoot-'em-up from Sweden, and New Zealand being officially named as the Mightiest Country in the World, with a staggering 100% of Acid's games (and a fair few of Vision's) making it into the listing. Oh, and Sensi still being the greatest thing ever despite stiff competition from GF2. And universal disbelief that Matt Bielby managed to persuade people that Leisure Suit Larry 3 was the 53rd best Amiga game ever back in 1991.

For explicit integer fans, there were 30 new entries (three in the top ten), two re-entries (both from the first Top 100), five sequels usurping their parents (including Populous 2 — again) and 31 sequels altogether (GF2 doesn't count). Monkey Island 2 climbing from 62 to 8 and Apidya falling 11 to 98 were the biggest movers. And for psychology fans, can you match the 1995 AP staff with the games they alone insisted were included? The games: Infocom Collection, Bob's Bad Day, Civilisation, Rainbow Islands, Fury of the Furies, Rodland and International Rugby Challenge. The staff: Jonathan Davies, Cam Winstanley, Sue Huntley, Steve Faragher, THE DARK LEADER OF HELL'S HIERARCHY, Jonathan Nash and Paul Mellerick. TRUE STORIES

It's been a strange month. And one of the strangest things about it has been the FLOOD of NEW GAMES that we've been promised in months to come. Ace.

COALA

POWER PREVIEW

Not a mis-spelled Australian, tree-climbing, eucalyptus-eating marsupial. No.

Runs on: A1200, A4000
Publisher: Empire
Authors: Bit Fusion Release: Easter

It's the Chinese year of the Pig at the moment, which seems particularly apt when referring to all things Amiga related in '95. However, amidst the avalanche of poor quality Doom clones, Isabelle Rees e-mails and press-releases for dot-matrix printers came a demo so impressive that it forced me to lift the heavy veil of world-weary cynicism from behind which I conduct my everyday life.

It's a flight sim, only without the boring realism stuff, and it's mouse controlled to give you extra freedom of movement. Piloting a helicopter gunship around, you're conveniently placed in the role of a gun for hire, so it doesn't matter too much if you blow up the wrong people or start blasting UN forces. Scenarios range from battles to enforcing ceasefires and, according to the press release, peace, but I've yet to see what fun can be had flying round and NOT shooting at people.

As well as tree-lined roads and tower blocks, there's loads of ground detail, and different missions are set at different times of day with corresponding haze/shadows/darkness and so on. Obviously, being in a helicopter you can switch to IR view so that everything goes green, but on the demo it looks quite fun fumbling your way through the dusky shadows looking for a target.

COALA's an acronym of the types of aircraft in the game, although no-one I've spoken to so far can actually remember what it stands for. What I do know is that it's another one of those games to emerge more or less complete from Europe (Holland, we think) and it's considered fairly hot property, as two weeks ago it was being shown to us by a company other than Empire.

Tending away from the normal realism of flight sims, COALA goes to great lengths to let you see how good it looks. There's a virtual cockpit (controlled by holding the right mouse button down) which allows you to look around independently of the helicopter's movement, and is apparently very handy for over-flying targets and checking them out. There's also a gun camera view, which isn't strictly necessary, but looks spookily like all that video footage we saw from the Gulf War. When you lock on to a target, the camera shakily follows the vehicle and (in an authentically mechanical manner) zooms in on it, and all you have to do is keep the cross hairs on target until the missile slams home.

Another cool bit is that COALA takes the myriad of views normally available in

role of a gun for hire"

"An acronym of the types" flight sims and makes them accessible. Apart from maybe the missile view, I find that you've never got time to mess about with fly-past views and overhead angles when you're playing a game, but COALA rather handily freezes the action, and then lets you move the view around with the mouse until it looks right. In this way, the demo lets you see a missile fly off, and then switches to a view with your helicopter in the background and the target in the foreground so you get the best view of the explosion.

You'll notice that I've been going on about how the demo does this and the demo does that, and how there's masses of ground detail as the game zips along at a cracking pace. Ground detail AND a fast running speed? Surely something's amiss. This is, after all, an Amiga flight sim. Well, the demo looks great, but it's a video tape of the game running on a beefed-up A1200, complete with an accelerator card and racks of fast RAM. Whatever that is. JD saw the game recently at a trade show, and said it looked great if "a bit slow" on a standard A1200. And, rather tellingly, Empire have billed COALA as a game "for the Commodore A1200/A4000" which is surely a euphemism for a slow-running game. So standard Amiga owners might as well just forget this one, standard A1200 owners should read our review before making up their minds, and accelerated-A1200 and big-box Amiga owners can rub their hands gleefully at the approach of COALA. All seven of them.

LEADING LAP

AMIGA POWER PREVIEW

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200
Publisher: Kellion
Authors: In-house
ETA: April

"What it means is that, when you go round a bend, the view will rotate so you sort of 'peer around the corner' to see what lies ahead. Um." Kellion's Tony Dillon is attempting to explain MPV – Moving Point of View – which is one of the main features of Leading Lap. Except it's not actually working on the prototype version of the game he's brought to AP, so I'm struggling a bit.

But hang on. Kellion?

A slightly embarrassed enquiry reveals them to be a new publisher who, as well as developing games of their own, are seeking out entertaining games from all corners of the globe and delivering them to your table. They're also brining us Ants and Hilt, but Leading Lap is currently their major project.

"It's been developed entirely with The Tiger."

Oh crumbs.

"Total Impact Game Editor. Editor."

It's something we've developed ourselves, and may well release commercially one day." At this point he pressed all sorts of buttons on our Amiga and polygons began to spin around on the screen. "We think of it as a 3D Construction Kit that actually works – you can write proper games with it. When Leading Lap's finished we're planning to use it for Leading Lap 2, which will feature real-life cities to drive around, and some sort of tank game."

But anyway.

"Yes, anyway."

Leading Lap is a 3D polygon driving game, fairly obviously. There are 25 tracks, which are divided up into four different sorts: racetracks, motorways, cities (where, rather than following a fixed course, you have to navigate from one place to another, planning your route so as best to avoid the traffic), and another one I can't remember. There are bridges and buildings, 15 vehicles racing against you, and even other traffic to avoid (including cars hurtling towards you).

The graphics we saw looked a bit blocky and sluggish, but Tony assured me they were being worked on as we spoke, and will be speeded up considerably. Also, there'll be an extensive array of options to adapt the game to your particular Amiga's capabilities. Apparently, "It should run in a frame on a 1200," whatever that means.

"Leading Lap will even work with the Cybermaxx VR headset," smirks Tony. True AMIGA POWER readers will remember the Cybermaxx from AP44's news pages.

PLAYER MANAGER 2

AMIGA POWER PREVIEW

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200
Publisher: Anco
Authors: Steve Screech
ETA: Mid-April

Yes, it's back. And boy has it taken its time. After something like six years, Player Manager has been updated, improved and re-titled Player Manager 2.

As in SWOS, you can play in games as well as manage them, using a supposedly enhanced version of the dreadful Kick Off 3 (AP46 57%). And there are four different modes of play: Personal Challenge, where you try to reach a set target; Knock Out, where four players all play against each other to see who's best; Player Manager World, where you can use your dream team, saved on disk, for a head to head or league competition against up to eight other players; and Rolling, where you just keep going with no time limits or goals to achieve.

And don't forget the coaching, tactics, transfer market, dead ball designer, board, ground staff and the other usual management features that should keep your mind more than a little busy. This one is definitely going to take a while to get to grips with, so no prizes for guessing what I'll spend most of next month doing. Ooh, I really love footy management games.

● PAUL MELLERICK

ATTENTION DAWN PATROL FANS

Empire are putting together a free upgrade for Dawn Patrol, enabling it to be played across two computers networked together, and providing a host of improvements to the way the aircraft behave. The catch? They're only planning it for the PC version at the moment, and are merely "thinking about" doing an Amiga equivalent. Petition them today, readers.

ANOTHER NEW GAME

Kellion, the plucky young software publisher behind Ants and Leading Lap, covered elsewhere in AP, have another game almost ready. It's called Hilt, and is a sort of Laser Squad game, only with a more sensible control system and robots. We've only had the briefest of looks at it, and were unable to take any pictures before it disappeared back into the ether, but hopefully we'll be able to bring you a review or something next month.

CD ILLUSIONS

Pinball Illusions (AP43 89%) is due to come out on the CD32 in April, and will probably sell in quite absurd numbers. (Its predecessor, Pinball Fantasies, is the machine's biggest-selling title to date.) It'll be exactly the same game - still just the three tables - but the music will all be CD-ified. And it'll cost £30.

FRENCH WORD FOR 'PAPER CLIP'

After the day is done and the latest embarrassing, shoddy, unpleasant, inane, putrid, irrefutably wrong issue of ("Michael Jackson" - Ed) torn ritually in two, there is little the mighty beings of AMIGA POWER like better than to go home. But such an exodus was halted early this month by the sudden discovery of the French word for paper clip. It is 'trombone', and a moment's thought revealed why. It is because paper clips look, in the eyes of the French, like trombones. We thought that you ought to know.

OBSESSION

Calvin Klein's first venture in the Amiga games market?

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Unique Development Sweden

Authors: Peter Zetterberg (project management, table design), Michael Brunnström, Kalle Lundqvist and Hans Härröd (programming), Jimmy Gustafsson (table artwork), Per Almered and Tord Jansson (sound)

ETA: May 1st

We made some new friends this month. Peter, Michael, Kalle, Hans, Jimmy, Per and Tord sent us some pictures of Obsession, their new pinball game, completely out of the blue. And, irritatingly, despite being Swedish, they speak even better English than us. Why is that? What is it about the Swedes?

"It probably has something to do with all the kinky sex and the ice-bears in the streets," explains

Peter Zetterberg, sending me scurrying fruitlessly to my dictionary. "Although I'll probably be hanged by some conservative English bloke for saying so. By the way, why is it called 'hanged' instead of 'hung'?"

Er.

Obsession, then. It started life on the Atari ST, and was received as "One of the best ST games ever" by our neighbours on ST Format, who gave it 94%. And, in fact, it's actually "The best ever Atari game - 98%" according to ST Review, ST Format's rival, which was recently sinisterly absorbed by Future Publishing and has our sympathy.

Naturally, I sidled into ST Format to size Obsession up. And it's great. There are four tables: Aquatic Adventure, with lots of underwater-related features; X-ile Zone, set in a post-apocalyptic future; Balls and Bats, which is organised like a baseball field and probably the least successful of the four; and Desert Run, Everything becomes apparent through...

BACK FROM THE DEAD

Rise of the Robots fans will be pleased to hear that work is underway on a sequel. Rise 2 - Resurrection, which will probably be on CD32 only thanks to the unfeasible number of disks it would otherwise require, is due for release in October, and Mirage have taken note of the flak the first game took. "More robots" means Rise 2 should take longer than ten minutes to complete. "A choice of any robot" means you won't always have to 'be' the blue one. "Robot flipping on screen" means you'll actually be able to jump over your opponent (although the early demo we played at the recent Show crashed when we tried this). "A plethora of weapons and projectiles" means you won't be restricted to punching and kicking. "Enhanced artificial intelligence" means there hopefully will be some. "Parallax scrolling" speaks for itself, as does "extra speed". And "A multitude of special moves" is good news as well. We'll leave you with a picture of two of the new robots.

European Computer Trade

which has bits of race track for you to send the ball around. There's always lots going on, the ball zings about rapidly, there's an LED display which messages and pictures appear on, the sound effects are good, and it's easy to see why the ST press got so carried away.

But standards are, of course, higher in the Amiga world. How will Unique Developments Sweden meet the challenge?

"The A500 version will feature more colours on-screen than the ST one (55+ instead of 40+). But best of all will be the A1200 version, which will have an extra table, 256 colours and - yes - multi-ball."

And how will it fare against 21st Century's Dreams/Fantasies/Illusions series?

"We're not going to claim that Obsession is 'better' than any other existing games, because in the same way that beauty is in the eye of the beholder, playability is in the mind of the player. But a new game has to be better than its predecessors, otherwise there wouldn't be a reason in the world for anyone to buy it."

Our thinking precisely, which bodes well for Obsession, and also UDS's next project, Substation, which is based on - good lord - Doom. But, games aside, who does Peter reckon would win in a fight between his lot and fellow Swedes Digital Illusions, who wrote the 21st Century games?

"Well, the last clash lost us four members, which means they're one up now. Thumbs up, though - we just might have our nuclear bomb ready at the end of this month."

That's the spirit. I'm greatly looking forward to Obsession. I only hope it doesn't make men I've never met suddenly give me flowers.

● JONATHAN DAVIES

FORMULA ONE GAMES

It looks like being an entertaining year for Formula 1 fans. Not only has the sport become an amusing Brits vs Germans contest, and not only are Domark just about to release their updated version of F1, but there are a couple of Formula 1 management sims on the way. The first, due in a month or two, is Pole Position from Ascon, the On The Ball people. It's going to be designed along similar lines to On The Ball World Cup Edition, with a strong storyline and your drivers falling in love and things. All we've seen of it so far are some impressive 3D graphics which will be used during the races.

The other one is something Krisalis are working on, and details of it are a bit sketchy at the moment. It's being written by Tim Blakelock, who has apparently once appeared in AP's Do The Write Thing, and Krisalis are currently stumped on how to represent the races. "Having a screen full of little dots whizzing around just isn't on in this day and age," said Krisalis's Tim James, watching us reviewing Ants.

BLITZ BOMBER

Blitz Basic seems to be the 'in' programming language at the moment (we must thank it for Guardian and Super Skidmarks 2), and this game's so into the idea of being associated with this hip new programming tool that it's flagged it in the title. We originally saw it a few weeks ago when the programmer sent it to us to preview, and at the time we rated it 'all right'. It's a Bomberman, Dyna Blaster kind of game, and in its first incarnation, it had tunnels, bomb punches and various other features not seen on Amiga versions of the game, but familiar to anyone with a SNES. Seeing as it's practically impossible for you to buy a copy of Ubi Soft's Dyna Blaster any more, there's a gaping hole in the market, but due to the lacklustre graphics, some dodgy animation and a wrong 'feel', we were set to rate it as a non-contender.

But now we hear that Arcane have bought it up and are planning to release it in a couple of months after an intense revamp. They've been out and bought all types of Bomberman games on loads of different formats and are planning to "do a Shadow Fighter" by nicking all the best bits from these tried-and-tested games. The naff graphics are out too, and they've reworked the movement so it looks like the characters walk rather than skate round the mazes.

More excitingly, there's also a link mode planned. As you all know, we're really hot on multi-player games, and also mad keen on Dyna Blaster, so Blitz Bomber's multi-player option sounds almost too good to be true. Impressed as we were by Super Skidmarks' eight player option, Blitz Bomber's promoting an unbelievable TEN (count 'em!) player option using two A1200s with the playing area spread over two monitors stuck side-by-side. Epic suss!

We would ordinarily have provided some screenshots for you to gaze on, but as they would only be misleading we haven't. So content yourselves with the knowledge that we've no idea yet how the finished version will play, or what it'll look like. Such is the might of AMIGA POWER.

DERRING DO

Following the successful dissemination of Derring Do on AP47's coverdisk, we received a plaintive telephone call from its author, Nick Slaven. "I've moved," he wailed, "so if anyone's been sending me registration fees" - which, of course, you all will have, right readers? - "the dosh may have gone astray." Nick's new address is Flat A, 891 Abbeydale Road, Sheffield, South Yorkshire S7 2BJ. If you enjoyed Derring Do, we suggest you demonstrate your appreciation in a fiscal manner. Remember: AP IS WATCHING YOU.

AMIGA POWER RECOMMENDS

As if to prove what an odd month it is, we 'Recommend' just four games.

SUPER SKIDMARKS

(AP48 86% A500/ 91% A1200)

The original Skidmarks was truly a magnificent game. Super Skidmarks is even more of a magnificent game than that. Super Skidmarks on an A1200 is even more of a magnificent game than the game which is even more of a magnificent game than the first one. If you haven't got two A1200's and seven friends, get them immediately so you can play what is the Eight-Player Cinerama High-Res Mode of Champions. The best racing game on the Amiga? Almost certainly.

SUPER LEAGUE MANAGER

(AP48 89%)

Contrary to popular belief, not everyone on AMIGA POWER hates football management games. Steve for one is a man who can manipulate his statistics with the best of them, but it was nonetheless a pleasant surprise to find that Super League Manager has no statistics. Nor indeed does it contain a Ryan Giggs or Nigel Spink. There isn't even a Liverpool in sight. And that's what makes it so good – it creates a fantasy league which you can immerse yourself in, it has no tedious figures to slog through, and it's just an excellent game all round. Basically.

(AP48 89%)

Last month good full-priced games were conspicuous by their absence, so in order to fill the legendary AMIGA POWER Recommends column this month we're including budget releases too. Hope you don't mind too much. Anyway, Exile: a classic, if you will. It may be old, it may look crap, BUT! do not let it deceive you. Behind the decaying facade lies a game which is so addictive it should be outlawed, along with chocolate and, er... er... some other stuff.

STARDUST

(AP48 91%)

First there was Stardust. Then there was another one of it. Now there's the one before the other one, except at a budget price. (And except we're not doing that joke any more. – Ed) It's Asteroids, except it's been updated with wonderful graphics, superb gameplay, addiction and variety (due to the tunnel sections and special missions). And for a mere ten quid there's absolutely NO EXCUSE for you not to purchase it immediately. If not sooner.

POWER HOUSE

Publisher: Impressions

ETA: June

Current trends in privatisation have led Impressions to develop a game called Power House, a business/god sim in which you attempt to gain total domination of the world's energy market. Power House is set in the near future, where the planet's entire power needs are catered for by just three companies, one of which you are in charge of. In the ensuing battle for supremacy and profits you can be ruthless and vicious, systematically using up all of the Earth's natural resources (boo, hiss), for which you will receive hefty fines (hurrah!), or you can adopt a more eco-friendly approach and invest in renewable sources of energy like solar or geo thermal, for which you'll receive a pat on the back (hurrah again!).

In Power House (which is influenced by those other business sims, Air Bucks and Detroit), you will apparently be able not only to conduct multi-million dollar business transactions, but also to negotiate various rights with world governments. And it shall all be a realistic representation of the political future, say Impressions. This is not because they exhibit DISTURBING POWERS OF PREMONITION, but because the game uses an economic and political model based on UN predictions. Hey – so does that mean if you buy this game you'll be able to see the results of the next general election? You never know.

Impressions reckon it's going to be 'the ultimate game for those who want to play a business god'. Do they speak the truth? If you want to find out, you could either: a) suspend one of the game's programmers by his ears from a light fitting, thus creating a crude but effective form of lie detector, or b) watch out for AP's review in a couple of months.

Mystery Screenshot Corner

In an attempt to contain the identity of the game involved in March's bout, the selection was made by Sue the Art Ed and revealed to no-one. This deterred contestants less than fractionally, and a full clip of indicative tracers tore through our J Cagney of certainty. The game was Mad Susie Goes On, and we unmask its informant as Edward Clarke of Eastleigh in Hampshire. "It is, AS YOU ALL KNOW, a PD platform puzzler," grunted Clarke. "I claim my prize," he added arrogantly, ensuring that even if Mystery Screenshot Corner were to dispense remuneration for foilage of its funnage beyond a name-check in these mighty pages (a situation we neither confirm nor deny) he would remain unfurnished. "That is all. I read you every day," he concluded in agreeable cross-reference to Digitiser of TV's weekly games chart update fame, saving himself a home-toasting of justice.

Apply your shape-recognition skills to this new picture and despatch a qualified guess to Pange Lingua Gloriosi Corporis Mysterium with the traditional continuation. Your prize upon successful application? Refer back to the parenthesis above for our stand upon this ticklish subject and ask no more of the crazy young kid that is Mystery Screenshot Corner.

POWER
PREVIEW

Another game with a snooker table in it.

Runs on: A500 & A1200
Publisher: Renegade/Time Warner
Authors: Graftgold ETA: May

Met Dave. The Robot. He's cute, he's bulbous, and he's shortly to feature in the latest emission from Graftgold, the programming heroes behind Rainbow Islands, Uridium 2, Fire and Ice, Empire Soccer and Nipper of AP coverdisk fame.

As a Virocop, you must zip around various levels, 15 normal game ones and 5 end of level meanie ones to be precise, destroying all the horrible viral like things that populate the level before you can move onto the next. Thankfully, perhaps because you're a 'cop', you're allowed to use weapons. You can hold three different types of weapons (you start with a gun, a lobbing bomb and a mine but can get different ones as you progress), using the space bar or second joystick button to switch between them.

As you can see from the screenshots the levels are multi-layered and go all over the place, and some are stupidly large. They are also completely free-ranging, meaning you can go about as you please and back off when things get too much for you. There's also plenty to collect, from little 0s and 1s to increase your score to battery packs that will, with any luck, restore enough power to get you through the rest of the level or until you can find another one, whichever happens first. You will also need to look out for the letters that are dropped by the viral meanies as you destroy them. Why? They're passwords. Well, little bits of passwords. Collect every single one of them and that's your password for the next level.

But you'll be able to read all this in the instructions. Sidestepping any technical details (just what are bitplanes?), I asked Graftgold's great leader, Andrew Braybrook, what Virocop will actually be like.

"In typical Graftgold style, there's plenty of attention to detail. I especially like the way that, when you destroy the tennis ball machines, the balls that were in the machine fall out as well. Oh, and the way that sometimes, there's one extra ball caught in the machine that might fly out and hit you out as you go past it." And - aargh - he's right, too.

"We're also pleased how long Virocop will keep you playing. We didn't intend it to be that big, but in the end we reckon it will take about 2½ hours to get through it from start to finish." Andrew then starting talking about something called Fast RAM, so I left.

Most of the game is in place as I write this with only a few 'programming things' left to finish off. What this all means for you (and us) is a review in the next issue of AMIGA POWER and hopefully a smooth and exciting blaster of a game.

● PAUL MELLERICK

NO, WAIT

An antidote to the current surplus of overhead-view driving games has been brought to our attention by AP reader Dave Green of London. It appears to be a coin-op version of the popular 1970s slot racing game Scalectrix, with steering wheels and foot pedals à la Super Sprint, and the track located beneath a glass top. But hang on. What are the steering wheels actually for? And what happens when one of the cars spins off the track? Do you have to call out an engineer to open up the machine and replace it in its groove?

Little elucidation is provided by makers Innovaciones Recreativas's press release: "The TOP CONTROL racing game make feel to you a genuine racing driver, challenging you to yourself, the ability to drive saving all the obstacles to be the number one. !!! DARE TO TRY IT !!! We feel unable to recommend this form of entertainment to readers of AMIGA POWER.

HORMONES

Lots of the best games are a cross between two other games. Except the only one we can think of at the moment is Empire Soccer, which is a cross between Speedball 2 and Sensible Soccer. In approximately a year's time, however, Mirage plan to release The Adrenaline Factor, which is clearly a cross between Syndicate and Cannon Fodder. Although it's still such a long way off, the game's already looking promising (on the PC, at least), with a little troupe of robots scurrying around an isometric landscape blowing things up. It's only planned for the CD32 at the moment, because the complex rendered scenery would fill up too many disks. Interestingly, Mirage actually hope to persuade us to call the game 'The Adrenalin(e) Factor', although we aren't sure why. 'Adrenaline' is the name of a naturally-produced hormone, while 'Adrenalin' is a manufactured version of the same substance, and a registered trademark.

COLONIZATION

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Microprose

Author: Sid Meier

ETA: June

Perhaps they'll call the A600 version 'Semi-colonization'.

Computer trade shows are a Satan-spawned idea where hapless computer journalists are forced to spend large amounts of time with just the sort of be-suited and be-pencil-skirted people that they became computer journalists to avoid having to deal with in the first place. However, they do have their uses, for although I had the misfortune to attend one of those nightmares of the netherworld at the end of last year, it was there that I first saw Colonization.

But let me backtrack a bit and explain quickly that as the author of three of my particular all-time favourite games; the swashbucklingly strategic Pirates!, the steaming business-sim Railroad Tycoon and the awesomely ambitious Civilization, Sid Meier CAN DO NO WRONG in my eyes.

So you can imagine my delight as I caught my first sight of this, his new game, through the smoked glass windows of the sinisterly plush Microprose stand. I rushed inside. I looked harder. My heart stopped. A billowing wave of nausea coursed through my body. My head started pounding and my mouth became so dry that my tongue felt like a newly fluffed-up pillow that had been forced into my oral cavity. What caused me such distress? It was the sign that read: "PC only. The Amiga is dead. You'd be a fool to imagine that we'd ever consider doing this on the Amiga. 'Cos we won't."

I left the show a crushed man. With all hopes for the future dashed. And a sour taste in my mouth.

That was in November. Now, unexpectedly, and fittingly just as Spring has arrived, comes the exciting news that Microprose will in fact be releasing Colonization on the Amiga. What joy! I spent all of yesterday out of the office bounding innocently around the fields with new-born lambs, rolling carelessly about in banks of newly blooming daffodils and whistling songs of endless love with the birds.

Why does the prospect of Colonization – but on the Amiga excite me so much. Well, it's loosely similar to Sid's previous classic Civilization and anybody who's seen that game will have a fair idea of how this one works.

However, Colonization is not just a sequel, nor even a cash-in, but a game that is different from Civ in a lot of ways.

The basic idea is that you are one of the four major players in the colonization of the New World: Britain, France, Spain or the Netherlands. You start the game in a ship on a blank map. A couple of goes later you'll have sighted land and disembarked. Then you build a colony. As the colony grows you are able to manufacture military units (among many other things). These units then start to explore the blank map. You come across Native Americans and the other colonizers. You go to war with them or you make treaties with them. You settle other colonies. You trade with your home country, the other colonizers and the Native Americans. And you build more colonies. And then, at a point chosen by you, you declare yourself independent from your original country.

Basically it's the story of how the USA came about.

There are a thousand more things to say about the game, but you'll have to wait for the review for that. Oh, and a word of warning. All these screen shots are from the (ggnnh) PC version. However Sid Meier has always concentrated on gameplay above graphics and I would imagine that the Amiga version will look pretty much the same.

AMIGA POWER'S GUIDE TO BUYING MAIL ORDER

When you're buying from any mail order company, it's worth following these AMIGA POWER guidelines:

- 1) Before you send any money, ring the supplier to make sure the item you require is in stock. Ask questions about the company's policy on delivery and returns of faulty equipment. Make sure there are no hidden costs such as postage and packaging. Find out when you can realistically expect to receive your goods.
- 2) Always read the small print on adverts.
- 3) Beware companies that do not include their address on their adverts. Also, avoid companies which do not answer or return your calls.
- 4) By far the best method of payment is by credit card. If ordering goods of more than £100 in total value, remember that you are legally entitled to claim compensation from some credit companies if the retailer goes bust. Check your credit card company's policy. You can also try to get extra insurance in advance.
- 5) If you're not paying by credit card, pay by cheque. Never send cash, and avoid using postal orders.

- 6) Keep records. If you are buying by credit card, keep a note of the time of the order and ask for an order number. When ordering anything over the telephone, always double-check the price.
- 7) If you are sending a cheque, keep a note of the cheque number, the date and the exact value. Make sure you know the exact name of the mail order company.
- 8) When you receive your goods, check them carefully. If anything is missing or faulty, contact the supplier immediately.
- 9) Always order from the most recent issue of AMIGA POWER.
- 10) If a problem does arise, contact the supplier in the first instance. Calmly and politely tell them your problem. Most problems turn out to be minor hitches or misunderstandings that can easily be resolved. If you think you have a genuine grievance, contact your local Trading Standards Officer. The number is in the phone book.

WANTED

Budding programmers frequently phone us up and ask us to name a game we'd like them to convert to the Amiga, to use on one of our coverdisks. And up until now we've suggested they try an arcade-perfect version of Missile Command. The challenge has still not been met, but we've changed our minds anyway. What we'd really, really like to see is an Amiga version of the fantastic two-player SNES puzzle game Super Puyo Puyo (also known as Dr Robotnik's Mean Bean Machine on the Mega Drive). We'd even pay money for one. It would have to be good, though, with finely-tuned controls and as much of the original's quirky Japaneseness as possible.

GIVE THANKS

July-December 1994 must seem like an awful long time ago now, but it has taken this long for our rivals to get around to releasing their official ABC circulation figures for that period. They read thus:

Amiga Action: 41,085
The One: 31,840

AMIGA POWER: 46,326

AMIGA POWER is therefore still THE MIGHTIEST AMIGA GAMES MAGAZINE IN EXISTENCE, crushing all challengers 'neath its fist of granite. Kneel before us.

ULTIMATE SOCCER MANAGER

It's looking a bit crowded out there, Brian.

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Daze

Author: Impressions

ETA: April

How to make an interesting Football Management Game – A guide. 1. Put football in it. 2. Add some management elements. 3. THINK OF A GIMMICK to make it stand out from all the others.

So, having read the bible of footy manny sims, what have Impressions done here? Let's take it point by point...

1. The football. All the teams from all the leagues. All editable.
2. The management. An overhead view of the match enables you to make decisions based on individual performances, so that's good.

There's all the usual training options.

AMIGA POWER PREVIEW

There're scouting and transfer markets, injuries and match reports, press conferences and 'interaction' with players, coaches, agents and fans. In fact it's almost as if Impressions have worked their way through a list of all the options available in other footy manny games and made sure that they've got every one that's ever been seen before.

3. THE GIMMICK. Is, bizarrely, business management. You can control the finances of USM far more thoroughly than you can in any other football game I've ever seen. The options for ground development include building shops and restaurants; there's not just an isometric representation of the ground, but also of the surrounding neighbourhood; and as you build things they'll appear. But being a property developer isn't the only aspect of business you'll be embroiled in, there's also sponsorship, advertising, fast food, betting and, in an unprecedented move towards realism, the option to give and take 'bungs'.

Now at first I was a little cynical about this business sim side to the game – it all sounded a bit dull. But then I decided that it was a more accurate reflection of the modern manager's role and as such could be quite fun to get involved with. As a result I've also decided that I'm rather looking forward to Ultimate Soccer Manager.

CRACKLE CRACKLE

"(Fiendish laugh) Everyone in the AP office thinks I'm just an innocent journalism student here on a work experience placement. None of them suspected for a minute that I'm actually an undercover operative, sent by a rival publisher to carry out SUBVERSIVE ESPIONAGE in order to tarnish the reputation of AMIGA POWER forever. After two weeks of 'working' here, I can exclusively reveal the DISTASTEFUL and UNCLEAN SECRETS which lie behind the mighty façade the magazine projects to the nation.

"Um... HOW MUCH?

From next month, AMIGA POWER will cost £4.25 an issue – 26p more than it does now, and an outrageous 30p more than it did last month. We're as appalled as you, and point the finger firmly at the greedy global megacorporation which now manipulates us. Not only must we create the world's most important Amiga games magazine each month, we are told, but we must also generate fat profits to fill the pockets of our sinister paymasters. We labour on, however, and must hope that you are still able to afford to read us.

PINBALL GAME

The pinball crown has been held by 21st Century for so long that everyone's pretty much assumed they've got it ad finitum. The last pinball game we can think of that wasn't by 21st Century was Ultimate Pinball Quest, politely dismissed by JD back in AP39. Even without competition, 21st Century upped the stakes by including multiball and high-res options in Pinball Illusions (AP43, 89%) and presumably even as we write this are sitting back, satisfied with a job well done and a monopoly on all things pertaining to Amigas and steel balls.

But hang on. Not only is Obsession on the way (see pages 26 and 27), but Arcane are claiming to have an Illusions-busting Pinball engine that's going to push Illusions without even bothering to use the extra credits. There aren't any piccies because the programmer's only recently sent the game to Arcane, who are (quite correctly) embarrassed by the half-assed Trekkie theme of the table, so the plan is to sort out all the options and then do a total number on making it look all spangly and cool.

So this one's got a full screen high-res mode, multiball and subgames that come up on the scoreboard, just like Illusions in fact. However, unlike Illusions, it's also got a split-screen low-res mode to keep track of all the balls. This goes up to 3 different sections and to tell you the truth, it made our eyes hurt.

As well as being impressively fast and flowing and having animation on the actual balls, there'll also be magnetic sections to alter the track of the ball, new buffers, new targets and that sort of thing. Arcane claim it's going to be brill, but then again, they would, wouldn't they? We'll keep you posted on development, but all we can say at the moment is that everything (other than the Trekkie motif) is looking well on track.

UFO 500

Make a cup of tea between moves?

We'll be reviewing an A500 version of Microprose's UFO (A1200 version, AP43 85%) next month. Given how long the A1200 takes to calculate the enemy's movements, it should at least be interesting.

IN THE STYLE OF...

About 75% of the In The Style Of... entries this month were sent in by people who obviously have a limited grasp of English. You see, the whole point of In The Style Of... is that you send in pictures which are of something IN THE STYLE OF something else. Anyone who sends in a picture which is just a straight sketch of a game will be subjected to slow and painful execution at the hands of sadistic children's TV presenters.

Anyway, this month's fish amidst a sea of rotting algae is Iain Wilson from Nottingham for his entry, Skidmarks In The Style Of The Clue. We decided to award him 4/10, which, via a series of complex mathematical equations, means he gets £80 worth of games. However, we decided that his entry would have been much funnier had he called it something like "Skidmarks In The Style of Birmingham", and so his prize is reduced to just £40 of software.

A KANGAROO COURT SPECIAL REPORT

LEST WE FORGET

Have you ever been suddenly unable to recall what a floppy disk looks like? Probably not, thanks to the cunning design of many of today's games...

It was terrible in the old days. You'd have slain the dwarven armies of Golroth'k, battled across the plains of Hok-Holraxxin, and made your way to the shores of the Sea Of Uncertain Despair. Suddenly, a ferocious three-headed serpent would rise from the sea, let forth a terrible cry, and advance towards you. Edging backwards up the beach, you'd find yourself pressed up against the cliff behind you, with nowhere to escape to and the foul beast's breath beginning to sting your eyes. Only your trusty Sword of Golroth could save you now. But before the action could continue, a discreet message would appear in the corner of the screen asking you to insert disk two.

You'd be thrown into confusion. "Disk 2? What is this word 'disk'?" It seems I have become so immersed in the game's carefully-crafted atmosphere, its loving depiction of a strange and distant land, that I have completely lost the ability to cope with 20th Century concepts, a problem compounded by my evidently limited intelligence. If only it would illustrate its request in some way, perhaps turning the whole screen black as it does so and then keeping me updated on its progress in intricate technical detail before lurching abruptly back to the shores of the Sea Of Uncertain Despair and expecting me to re-suspend my sense of disbelief and carry on as if nothing had happened." Progress is a wonderful thing.

SUPER LEAGUE MANAGER

(Audiogenic)

Super League Manager does everything in its power to allow you to believe you're a real football manager. The crude menu system of most footy manny games is replaced by a delightful representation of the desk in your office, and the meaningless statistics are swept away by to be replaced by more human text descriptions. We could almost forget we are playing a computer game altogether – which is perhaps why we are shown this picture of a disk at the appropriate moments. It is a little small, but a disk nevertheless.

4/10

JURASSIC PARK

(Ocean)

Jurassic Park is a pretty accurate scene-by-scene adaptation of the blockbusting movie, so it follows that the disk-swapping should also be true to Spielberg's vision. You're sure to remember the part in the film where the T-Rex pauses in his terrifying pursuit of the jeep along the dark, rainswept road, the jungle disappears to be replaced by an expanse of whiteness, and a picture of a floppy disk appears (marked, of course, with the 'JP' logo).

7/10

THE CRASH DUMMIES

(Virgin)

The crash dummies are cartoon characters, so it is good to see that, when the screen clears and a picture of a disk appears, it too is drawn in a cartoon style. We can therefore forgive the omission of the write-protect tab, particularly in view of the pair of arrows reminding us which way round the disk is to be inserted.

AKIRA

(ICE)

We are battling against Akira's crudely-drawn graphics, really trying to believe we're being chased around post-apocalyptic neo-Tokyo by the agents of a sinister corporation, when the screen goes black and this picture of a disk appears. It is neatly drawn, and even allows us to re-associate the word 'Akira' with the name of a computer game, rather than the genetically-engineered superhero we were trying to pretend it was.

GRAND PRIX 500 2

(Silmarils)

Tch. They're just not trying.

1/10

ATR

(Team 17)

Quite impressive, this one. While most disk-artists stick with a safe two-dimensional illustration, Team 17 have here taken a bold step into three dimensions.

The sliding shutter is perhaps a little too shiny for brushed aluminum, but the way that the blue plastic fades into darkness is a nice touch. And it is always good to be reminded of the Amiga DOS designation of our internal disk drive as "DF0:".

8/10

THEME PARK

(Bullfrog)

Bullfrog seem almost embarrassed about this one. They try to brighten it up with a cheery picture of the advisor, and a pretty flowery pattern. But deep down, in their heart of hearts, they know that what we really want is to know what a disk looks like. And they reluctantly show us.

3/10

PROJECT X

(Team 17)

No messing about here. Everything's spot-on, down to the little arrow in the corner, the write-protect tab and even the way shading is used on the complicated bits around the shutter to give a sense of depth. All that lets it down is the grey colour used for the aluminium – it's just a little too dark. The "ACCESSING DISK" message eradicates any lingering doubt, however.

9/10

KNIGHTS OF THE SKY

(US Gold)

Fantastic. You're wafted gently back through the decades with an ingenious black-and-white movie-style introduction and some tinkly piano music until you could almost believe you really are a gallant Edwardian aviator. Then, inconveniently, disk 2 is needed. So – BLAM! – the screen clears and 1916 France is replaced by not only an accurate scale drawing of Disk 2, but half an Amiga as well, complete with power LEDs and cooling slats. There can be no mistaking what's required of you here.

FATMAN: THE CAPED CRUSADER

(Black Legend)

Here's a really bold one, with some curious satanic symbols on the label. The shutter is just a little too light in colour, however, and it's a shame they forgot the small engraved arrow at the bottom right.

7/10

(Coktel Vision)

Hee hee. Those lovable Frenchmen. We quickly become immersed in the quirky world of those cheeky Goblins, and chuckle heartily at their knockabout exploits. So it is a little surprising to learn that their innocent, technology-free world for some reason contains floppy disks, which they are happy to pose with between levels.

4/10

The Future Of Pictures Of Disks In Games

As technology marches onwards, soon there will be no more disks. They will be replaced by glittering silver CDs. AMIGA POWER has reflected this change with our special 'CD edition' this month, and games will have to too

MICROCOSM

(Psygnosis)

The tension mounts as a sinister helicopter circles in the night sky, the subject of Psygnosis's much-trumpeted rendered introduction. Who are the shadowy figures who pilot it? What terrible task awaits us? Will we escape with our lives? Why has a picture of a Compact Disc suddenly appeared on the screen?

(Microprose)

Spiriting up a sense of the military in polygon flight sims has always been tricky, so here Microprose resort to the old lots-of-badly-drawn-pictures-of-offices-and-personnel-with-a-filing-cabinet-that-you-have-to-click-on-to-turn-off-the-music ploy. It's painful, but at least they're doing their best. Then, in case you hadn't noticed the yellow light flashing on your CD32, all this is suddenly replaced by a picture of a CD (tastefully shrouded in mist, mark you) and the words "CD Access". You can almost smell the cordite.

JUNGLE STRIKE

(Ocean)

Hmm. Not too sure about this. The drawing of the disk is superb, one of the boldest we've seen, enlarged until it spills of the screen giving an unparalleled view of the aluminium shutter. But they've been unable to discard the idea of helicopters entirely during this important moment, and the disk is a bit hidden. So we've often been thrown into confusion while playing Jungle Strike, and have inserted video cassettes and even potted plants into our disk drive by mistake.

GAMES

We actually bother to play games at AP, and review them HONESTLY and TRUTHFULLY. We won't tell you a game's great simply because that's what someone else has told us. And we ensure the best games are brought to your attention so that you may enjoy them as we do. But if we had to live on the same food for the rest of our lives, what would it be?

JONATHAN DAVIES

"You mean, if I had to choose one food to live on for the rest of my life, what would it be?" asked editor Jonathan (drawn this month by Rich Pelley) for the sake of clarity. His brow wrinkled, and he gazed out of the window, lost in thought. "Sorry? Food. Yes. Er, I've just eaten, thanks." What? "Eh?" He fell silent again, studying his fingernails intently. "Sorry, what was that? Which food would I choose? For the rest of my life? Um, custard doughnuts, I think. Ones that've been chilled for at least an hour. Then I... would..."

STEVE FARAGHER

"Har haarr," said Steve (courtesy of Richard Doidge), still not having fully reverted from his role as Midshipman Baines in The Garden That Time Forgot despite his apparent return to normality last month. "Oi'd be choosin' praaawns. There bain't no substitute for these zlipperry little vullows." He held up a handful of live prawns and let them slither through his fingers, grinning broadly as we recoiled in disgust. "You don't be wan'in' to cook 'em, though," he added slyly. "For then they'd go pink, the colour of a lady's dress. Har haarr."

RICH PELLEY

Rich (whom Steve Faragher has reinterpreted) now has to be contacted by telephone, having infiltrated PC Format on our behalf to test the waters. "TOFFEE CRISPS," he decided after some thought. "THEY'RE QUITE NICE. PHEW," he added. Rich has an odd habit of wearing up to twelve layers of clothing at a time, the order in which he puts them on being unrelated to popular convention – a short-sleeved T-shirt might go on over a jumper, or a vest over a cardigan. "THIS WAY I CAN ADD OR REMOVE LAYERS DEPENDING ON FLUCTUATIONS IN ATMOSPHERIC CONDITIONS," he explains. Except he perpetually looks overheated.

CAM WINSTANLEY

"Lasagne," said Cam (captured here for us by Sue Huntley). "What's more, given a lifetime's supply of lasagne, I would eat it all at once, in a feast spanning several weeks. I would enjoy this tremendously, and then, having gained enough body fat to last me for the rest of my life, I would sit in an armchair the size of Battersea power station and reminisce fondly about my pasta-and-bolognese frenzy. And belch."

JONATHAN NASH

Jonathan's eyes darted about the room (his likeness partially captured at great personal risk by Jonathan Davies). "Sorry – food?" Incomprehending, and scenting a possible plot to uncover details of his past, he grabbed his coat and a handful of cartoon videos and fled through the door. We resisted the urge to discuss him in his absence, knowing that secretly this was exactly what he wanted us to do.

RICHARD DOIDGE

Appearing for one month only as part of his journalism course, Richard Doidge (illustrated here by Jonathan Nash) has adapted quickly to the ways of AMIGA POWER. "I'd select chocolate," he said, his voice growing mightier with each day that passed. "I could never grow tired of its smooth texture and cocoa-derived flavour. And now that I am one of you, I would require its high carbohydrate content to support me in my judgement of all creation, my upholding of what is good and true, and my smiting of the unworthy. It is chocolate that I would choose. Yes."

SUE HUNTLEY

"I'd miss roast potatoes terribly," hissed Sue (drawn by Paul Mellerick). "But I'd have to choose avocados. Their soft, green flesh has no equal." Right, we thought, wondering how this could be elaborated upon to fill the remaining space. Fortunately, Sue continued: "They also have a variety of other uses. The hollowed-out skins make convenient shoes. And the hard pits can be hurled at dogs and cats who attempt to scavenge from one's dustbin. Apart from my dog, whom I love."

PAUL MELLERICK

Paul (drawn by Cam Winstanley) ran his fingers through his long, for-some-reason-newly-dyed-black hair, answered four more phone calls from his friends, and said: "Chicken." Then his phone rang again. It's been a strange month, what with Steve's holiday in Scotland, and the curious sweets he brought back, and our special CD edition, and all the reviews falling through at the last minute as usual, and the clocks going forwards. Tch, eh?

HOW DOES OUR SCORING SYSTEM WORK THEN?

1. We play a game until we can bear to play it no more. Then we play it a bit more just to be safe. Then we write our review ignoring all commercial pressures. Because we are your friends. Trust us.
2. The percentage scale's got 100 increments, and we use them all. Crap games get single figures, average games get 50s. Unlike other mags, over (50%) and only brilliant games get 80s. Great graphics or nice sound if it's useless? Not us. Our reviews give a single mark based on the game as a whole.
3. Who cares if a game's got great graphics or nice sound if it's useless? Not us. Our reviews give a single mark based on the game as a whole.
4. We're hard but we're fair.
5. Fifth points? We'd rather eat sprouts.

TFX

We don't know what it stands for either.

Runs on: A1200, A4000
Publisher: Ocean
Authors: DID
Price: £40
Release: TBA

This month I visited Hell. And it wasn't how I was expecting it to be at all. I always imagined it would be a pub that only served expensive bottled lager. I'd be sitting at a table with a group of cigarette-smokers who were having a perpetual conversation about old children's television programmes. And on the stereo would be the Commitments playing soul songs slightly too slowly for the rest of eternity.

But in fact, Hell turns out to be playing TFX on an Amiga 1200 with no extra memory and only one disk drive. Before the game starts it is necessary to perform six disk swaps, most of which seem merely to generate a series of completely pointless pictures on the screen: outside the USAF Fighter Weapons School – grind, clunk, grind – inside the USAF Fighter Weapons School – grind, clunk, swap – slightly further inside the USAF Fighter Weapons School – grind, clunk, grind – inside your office inside the USAF Fighter Weapons School – grind, clunk, swap, grind – your desk inside the USAF Fighter Weapons School – grind, swap, grind, clunk – your commanding officer inside the USAF

Fighter Weapons School – grind, grind – a close-up of your commanding officer inside the USAF Fighter Weapons School... Altogether, even allowing for the broken disk drive on the AP A1200 which meant I had to perform each disk swap with the aid of a fork, from switch-on to take-off it takes 10 minutes to 'scramble' your Eurofighter 2000 – just one minute short of the record held by US Gold's World Cup USA '94. In that time, in real life, your airbase would have been peppered with 1000lb runway

This is what happens if you fail. Let it be a lesson to you.

This is your map, showing where you must fly to.

And this – this – is your aircraft. On its aircraft carrier.

denial weapons and your Eurofighter 2000 crushed by the remains of its own hardened shelter.

SPARROW

But that's not the end of it. Once in the air you'll discover that the graphics seem terribly dull compared with the PC pictures Ocean have been printing in their TFX adverts for the last year or so. So you'll summon up the options menu, push up the detail level and select 'Return to game'. But – oh no. Grind, clunk, grind... Two disk swaps and 30 seconds later you're back in the game and, although the game now looks lovely, the screen is updating only about once a second, making it impossible to do anything. So it's back to the options menu to switch everything off again and – aargh – clunk, grind... two more disk swaps before dull, grey normality is restored.

And then, should you complete the first training mission (which, thanks to the sophistication of today's air-to-air missiles, is simply a case of pressing Return and Space and waiting for the MIG-21 to blow up), there's another five minutes of grinding and clunking before mission two appears.

TFX gives you three planes to fly, although it likes to decide for itself which one to give you for which missions.

EUROFIGHTER 2000

It might look rather like a 1970s Mirage, and have a dreadful name, but this is the future of air defence in Europe. It's being built by a consortium of German, British, Italian and Spanish companies (France having pulled out of the project), and is due to enter service in 1995. It flies at Mach 2, is packed with electronic bits and bobs, and is TFX's middle-best plane.

It is cold when you're this high up.

LOCKHEED F-22 SUPERSTAR

The best plane in the game is this one, which tends to be used for carrier-based operations. It's being developed for the US Air Force and Navy, and, as well as being visually pleasing and able to fly at Mach 2.3, is stealth-capable. This means it can sneak up on enemy fighters and launch missiles from its internal weapons bays, obviating the need for guns. (Although the game provides some for entertainment purposes.)

LOCKHEED F-117A

Referring to this aircraft as the Stealth Fighter is, of course, a mistake commonly made by the ignorant and ill-bred.

For it

So wear a good, thick jumper.

And p'raps bring a blanket.

is a ground attack aircraft, using its curious shape and special black paint to slip undetected beneath enemy radar cover and loft in the weapons hidden in its belly. It's a sub-sonic aircraft, but that isn't a problem because you don't want to be going too fast when you attack ground targets anyway. It is also the only aircraft in the game that is already in service.

The square jet pipes are an interesting feature. Eh, readers?

Notice the fleet in the background. It is also interesting.

This, however, is not interesting. It would be better removed.

It was all too much, so I scooped up the pile of floppy disks and installed them onto a mighty Amiga 4000.

And suddenly I was in Heaven. TFX on an Amiga 4000 is an excellent game. The screen still doesn't update as smoothly as on a top-end PC, but you can stick all the detail options onto maximum and it's still perfectly playable.

The landscape now fades gradually into the distance. City lights twinkle on the ground beneath you. Your plane has a logo texture-mapped onto its tail, and convincing-looking weapons dangling beneath its wings. Missiles whoosh away leaving a trail of smoke behind them. Your 'virtual cockpit' scrolls around usefully when you look to the left and right. Your radio crackles with messages denied to humble 1200-owners. Baddies explode devastatingly. Everything still looks decidedly grey, but it's now an authentic, atmospheric grey. And with disk swapping and accessing eliminated by the combination of more memory and a hard drive, it's now possible to play and appreciate TFX properly. (The pointless pictures still irritate, though.)

At its heart, TFX is a cold, ruthless simulation that makes few concessions to games players. After all, DID, who developed it, also design simulators for the world's airforces, and are a serious, straight-talking group of people. You can play it in an 'arcade' mode if you want, where you blow baddies up to score – gasp – 'points', and you can adjust the realism setting to eliminate things like crashes. But apart from that, TFX couldn't be further removed from the knockabout fun of something like Knights of the Sky. Your powerful jet engines send your plane just where you want it, and nail-biting aerial duels are more or less eliminated by missiles which shoot down planes so far away you can't even see them.

MAVERICK

But that doesn't mean it's not fun – modern weaponry brings pleasures of its own. Experienced players will be able to juggle the various views to show enemy fighters lurching around in the sky to avoid missiles, desperately scattering flares and chaff. Laser-guided bombs are also fun, as I explain elsewhere. There's in-flight refuelling to experience, and carrier landings, and HARM radar-seeking missiles. Everything's been included. The only slight let-down is that you're always on your own, fighting a lonely, single-handed war, bereft of the company of the wingmen you get in Dawn Patrol or Flight Of The Intruder. But in a way that makes it all the more

"Fades gradually into the distance"

Sorry about this one.

Here you can appreciate the view from the 'virtual cockpit', you can.

AT THE YEAR 1995 GEOLOGISTS DISCOVERED THE OLDEST EVER REMAINS OF OLD AND UNKNOWN... LOCATION CLASSIFIED BUT BELIEVED TO BE A FIELD STATION IN THE SOUTH ATLANTIC OCEAN 700 TO 800 MILES EAST OF THE STRATEGICALLY IMPORTANT FALKLAND ISLANDS STRATEGICALLY IMPORTANT AND ACROSS THE SOUTH POLAR ICE FIVE OPEN THE FOLDING... THE CONTINENT OF SOUTH AMERICA HAS CLAIMED THE RIGHTS TO THE FOLD.

A flag with some writing over it.

Notice all the missile and bombs under the wings, and the city lights.

CERTAIN DEATH

The sophistication of modern warfare makes failing to hit the target a thing of the past. Come with us as we launch a daring attack on a heavily-defended installation, and marvel at our bravery.

There's the place up ahead. They probably haven't spotted us yet, thanks to the stealth capabilities of our F-117A.

Flipping to the viewfinder of our laser guidance system, we begin to zoom in on the target.

There it is. We'll aim for that big building with all the people running around it waving their arms. Lock on, wait for the right moment, and bombs away!

Flipping to weapons view allows us to ride the bomb to its target as it follows the laser beam from the guidance system.

We can even cut to the missile's built-in camera, à la Gulf War, to... Hang on. Comically, this is own base.

Phew. It missed.

BEHOLD THE REAL TFX

We've filled these pages with pictures of TFX running on an A4000, because it looks nicer that way, and appearances are important to us. You can achieve almost the same effect on an A1200 by turning all the detail levels up to maximum (only the texture mapping on the tail fin and instrument panel and the Gouraud shading are denied to you), but then the screen updates at approximately 1 frame per second, which is clearly useless. So here are some pictures of TFX running at the default setting on an A1200. Like all flight sims, it looks better when it's moving, but not a great deal.

"Wouldn't mark down a Ferrari" exciting when you see red dots closing from all sides on your radar.

And the great graphics mean that TFX is one of those flight sims in which you can have a good time by just flying around looking at things, zooming low over cities and cruising among the fluffy, white clouds.

But then, annoyingly, Amiga Shopper noticed that their A4000 was missing, heard the mighty throbbing of its processors coming from next door, and came and asked for it back. It was therefore a return to the horrors of A1200 TFX.

Except this time, Cam had finished playing Exile so I was able use the other AP A1200, the one with a broken hard disk but two external drives and loads of extra memory. The disk swapping wasn't nearly so all-pervading this time, thanks to the extra drives, and the bigger memory meant that all the sound effects worked properly. And, while the graphics are still disappointing, and attacking ground targets can be a nightmare due to the way objects don't appear on the screen until you're really close to them, I decided that it is possible to play TFX on a 1200. You just can't revel in it in quite the same way.

You wouldn't mark down a Ferrari for being out of the reach of most people, or for having too small a boot. And you wouldn't penalise games like Dynablasters or Super Skidmarks 2 for being boring to play on your own – they're simply not designed as one-player games. So I think, in an AP

AND NOW, TIME FOR 'THE GALLERY'

If you're going to spend months lovingly creating a 3D polygon-filled environment, sacrificing detail for the sake of shape and movement, and asking the player to suspend his disbelief and use his imagination to fill in the spaces, why then completely shatter your carefully-crafted atmosphere by filling the screen with crudely-drawn stills between missions. All flight sims do it, presumably because all flight sims do it.

First, I'm going to give TFX an A4000 mark as well as an A1200 one.

On a bare-bones 1200, TFX just about works, but you'd be much better off with F-19 Stealth Fighter or something. On a 4000, TFX is one of the Amiga's best flight sims, and would be a fine purchase. The chances are, though, assuming we lost 500/600 owners about halfway through the second paragraph, you've got something in between – an A1200 with a few extra bits and pieces plugged in. So imagine a sort of sliding scale between the mediocre 1200 mark and the enormous 4000 one, adding on 3 percent for each extra floppy drive, 5 percent for a hard drive, 5 percent for some extra memory, 10 percent for an accelerator and so on. And sort of devise your own mark.

● JONATHAN DAVIES

Although vastly tedious, this picture at least gives a good view of your instrument panel.

UPPERS

The most sophisticated-looking flight sim on the Amiga, with a strong sense of 'actually being there'. The cutting-edge technology aspect is entertaining, especially the laser-guided bombs. It's got Herculeses in it.

DOWNERS

Annoying between-mission pictures which don't help to create an involving storyline. Jerkier updating than you'd expect on such a powerful machine. You feel rather detached from the action sitting in your electronic cockpit, which, combined with the lack of true dogfighting action, means it can get a little dull in the long term.

THE BOTTOM LINE

It's so busy being an accurate simulator that sometimes it forgets it's meant to be fun as well. But otherwise, TFX is a great accomplishment – an attractive, well-rounded and absorbing game that we like.

85 PERCENT

One final picture of the Eurofighter 2000, just in case.

UPPERS

Plenty of futuristic weaponry. The usual range of scenarios. More or less playable.

DOWNERS

Horribly compromised graphics. Nightmarish disk-related horrors, aggravated by the pointless pictures. Hardly any sound.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Well, it's here. But it can't hide the fact that it's a game designed for more expensive machines that's been cut down to fit onto the Amiga, rather than a game developed with the Amiga in mind.

Cheating. It's not big, it's not clever and you certainly won't prosper by doing it. Unless of course we're talking about computer games. You see in the world of games, cheating can sometimes make you big, sometimes requires you to be clever (and sometimes not) and if you get the right cheat you will definitely find things moving in your favour.

Take football games for instance. Get yourself some serious money in a management game and you're laughing all the way to the top of the division (hopefully). Or maybe even find a cheat to make all your players great or a special way to score a goal every time in a more arcadey game and you can then wipe the floor with everyone. But what if you could do all this without cheating?

Last month we reviewed the Premier Manager 3 Editor, which basically allowed you to alter any detail in the game to your own requirements – some people even thought having Bath City in the Premier league was funny. Well, now Krisalis have added the same sort of editor to their Manchester United game. This time around called Manchester United: The Double (remember last season?). They've also added some other new bits and pieces but we'll be concentrating on the editor to start with. If you don't mind.

ALL CHANGE

Basically, think of every aspect you find in a football game: the teams, the kits, the players, their abilities, what player plays for what teams, everything. Well now, you can change it all. Yes, all of it.

This means you can, should you wish, have AMIGA POWER United playing in black shirts, black shorts and socks, with all the players as good as their stats will allow, playing in the Premier League with opponents including the likes of Bath City, Bromsgrove Rovers and even Accrington Stanley. Or you could simply make Ryan Giggs a bit crap. The choice is yours. Personally I like the idea of an editor. As long as you don't take it too far. I mean if you make all your players great, where's the challenge? But if you fancy putting your own name in place of your favourite player and then playing as that team, then great. The best thing here though is you can do whatever you like. The only thing that may hold you back is not wanting to make the game too hard for yourself.

R UNITED:

The way the teams stay in tight formation is particularly impressive.

You can of course leave the game alone and concentrate on the other new bits. The transfer market for example. Yep, the chance to buy and sell players, looking for a new star, buying an old has-been or even trying to make a bit of money to afford that player you've had your eye on for a couple of seasons. All supremely quick and easy to do, and valuable in the game.

Ah yes, the game, I'd almost forgotten about this bit. They've moved the angle around a bit. So instead of Sensi Soccer comparisons (which had been levelled at the game in previous incarnations) we can now call it a cross between Sensi and FIFA Soccer. Look at the screenshots to see what I mean.

Although you might not think it, this new view actually makes the game more fun to play. The extremely fast nature of the game means that it's useful to be able to see where the ball is coming from, and this new view lets you do that. Unfortunately I still can't get to grips with it. I've tried, I really have, but it's just too all over the place.

I've tried playing as different teams, to experience good and bad ones, but all to no avail, I just can't seem to do what I want. Perseverance does pay off, with the odd goal here and there, but there's not enough continuity, not enough flow and definitely not enough user-friendliness in the control system to allow you to add your own style of play. You just end up booting it upfield in the vain hope that someone will connect with it in a positive way and that it might just end up in the back of the net. The same is true when you've not got possession, you slide about all over the place or hopelessly dive through the air in order to clear a cross or a corner.

Anyway, it's all rather frustrating and I'm surprised our joypad still works from the number of times I've thrown it on the floor in anger.

TO FINISH

I've played and reviewed this game in its CD32 guise, and although I appreciate the changes they've made, the game is still so flawed and makes you so angry it's quite unplayable. You can turn the football bit off, but this leaves you with a slightly bare, management-only game that's a bit

"Hello. Haven't I seen you somewhere before?"

t tedious. The detail in the game is great and the editor is also pretty good, but unlike nearly every other football game we've got, I'm afraid I'm not going to be playing this one on those quiet afternoons in the office.

● PAUL MELLERICK

UPPERS A great, all encompassing editor allowing you to change everything you might want to your own desire. And a new and very fine transfer bit.

DOWNERS But the guts of the game, the actual match day playing bit, is just so frustrating and lifeless that playing becomes a real chore. You can turn off the match bit, but this just leaves you with an empty bare management game not really worth that much.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Another one of those games that get so many things right, the presentation and attention to detail especially, but messes up big time on the most important bit. It seems such a shame to have gone to all that trouble.

58 PERCENT

THE BOTTOM LINE

The differences are so minor that I would have to become as pedantic as all the others in the office before I mentioned them. And I won't.

EXILE A1

A complete misnomer, of course. In this game you're a castaway.

Runs on: A1200
Publisher: Audiogenic
Authors: Pea Irvin, Wild Reeve, Angry Cox
Price: £30
Release: April

So, Exile then. In AP issue one, Gary Penn summed up the entire essence of the game rather well: "What this actually represents is a successful marriage between the cream of text-based adventures and the arcade style shoot-'em-up" he said. "To all intents and purposes, it's the first in what will hopefully become a new breed of decidedly modern arcade adventures," he hypothesised. "The arcade adventure is dead. Long live Exile," he concluded, suitably pompously as befits a review in AMIGA POWER. That was in May 1991, and with it all I concur, which makes the following two pages astonishingly difficult to fill without repeating Gary and being sued by him for plagiarism.

Although it doesn't look like it, Exile is an adventure game. In the manual prequel blurb, you answer a distress beacon from a survivor of a previous landing expedition. He tells you about the evil Triax and how, blah, blah, banished, blah, blah caverns, blah, blah etc. End of intro.

BEN GUNN

The game starts with Triax making a brief appearance (so brief I only noticed it the third time I played the game) and stealing your navicomp, effectively stranding you on the planet. Like all the best bad guys (Donald Unpleasance and Alan Rickman for example), Triax doesn't actually look mean at all, and resembles Davros from TV's famous Dr Who rather than

"Alan Rickman for example"

Goro. Only he flies, rather than trundling around in the bottom half of a yogurt pot. So, within three seconds from starting, you've got a reason to explore the planet. Thankfully, your guy's got a jetpack, so getting around isn't a problem, and the score in the corner's steadily ticking down from 10,000 points second by second, so the game even instills a sense of urgency.

One of Exile's main selling points is the real-world environment it inhabits. As hundreds of office hours devoted to Gravity Force 2 will testify, we're great fans of real physics here on AP, and everything works in Exile so naturally that you tend to forget the mechanics and just concentrate on the game. Psygnosis' Puggsy (AP36, 40%) tried to use the same real-physics

environment in a puzzle/adventure game, but that was just pathetically fiddly and annoying. However, the difference is that while physics gets in the way in Puggsy – you build a pyramid of drums only to bump into them and knock them down again – it works for you in Exile. Check out the pictures for IRREFUTABLE EVIDENCE of this.

ROBINSON

All adventure games are linear, but what makes some better than others is the amount of latitude they give the player. Point-and-click adventures are notorious for funnelling the player down a single path where success is just a matter of trying to think as illogically as the programmer.

On the other hand, sprawling fantasy romps such as the Ishar series offer far too much leeway, so you spend more time tramping around

The caves are inhabited with loads of creatures, most of which try to kill you immediately. Even the parrots bother you and they're... parrots for heaven's sake.

First a couple of pesky, pecking parrots sight you...

And then suddenly there's a whole fluttering, fighting flock of them.

These manic, molesting monkeys can be a bit of a bore as well.

When it comes to the cunning, collapsing clams you have to be wary.

The pesky, pinching piranhas are best avoided altogether.

Even the frail, feeble frogs can give you a bit of a nasty nip.

AND TIME MARCHES ON

See for yourself the stunning differences between the original Exile and this new, special AGA version, and then decide if you're really going to be all that bothered by the flashy new graphics.

In full technicolour glory now...

...and as it was four years ago.

Backgrounds a-go-go...

...backgrounds a-none.

Behold - THE PASSCODE SYSTEM FROM HELL. Once you've got the right code, you have to fly around advancing each digit a single number every time you hit it with your head. This is patently an absurd, but thankfully infrequent interlude.

than you do swashing and a-buckling. Exile's somewhere comfortably in the middle, although some of the puzzles tend towards the impossibly obscure. After being stuck for hours, I phoned Audiogenic for some solutions that were so obscure I'd never have thought of them and would have been stuck on the same bit forever.

The game's set in one huge cavern network, although there're a number of sub-sections partitioned by massive stone walls or teleporters, and in each of these sections there're a number of puzzles to solve or things to find that you can do in any order. The net effect of this is that you feel like you're roaming at will, but at the same time are being craftily nudged along by the programmers.

So with the gift of hindsight, was Gary Penn right? Did this herald the start of a new form of adventure games? Well no, unfortunately, which is why Exile still seems so inventive all these years later.

By stripping away the conventions of adventure games and making it look and play like an elaborate arcade game, Exile really does take a fresh stab at all that puzzle solving. In terms of style, its real-time, real conflict problem solving elements are closer to Doom than they are to Dungeon Master, which makes me wonder why tedious first-person-perspective adventure games still manage to sell these days.

CRUSOE

I've not even mentioned the A1200 version yet, have I? Well, that's because the game is, as far as I could see, exactly the same as the original, only the graphics have been changed. The main character's bigger, so you see less of the screen, although in better detail and with a parallaxing backdrop. For some reason they've taken the helmet off your guy, so he now looks like a yob. I'd feared that the smaller visible playing area would be detrimental to the game, but the only instance I could find was trying to shoot a switch which was off screen in this version but visible in the original.

The main improvement in this version is that it supports a CD32 controller, with all the buttons doing something. Since Exile requires over 20 different keys to pick up, throw and drop objects, alter bullet trajectories and use different weapons, this is a real bonus as it puts most functions literally in your hands, and although the game still works fine with a normal joystick and keyboard, I'd strongly recommend a CD32 controller.

So it's heart felt accolades all round for Exile, which only leaves you to decide which version to buy: this one, or the old version which has just come out on budget. To be honest, the main thing to consider's the CD32 controller, as although the new graphics are nice, they didn't alter my view of the game substantially, so the older, cheaper version plays as well as this one. £15 or £30? Either way, it's the same, absorbing, unique game.

● CAM WINSTANLEY

▲ UPPERS Huge and absorbing, easy to save and load, and with a wonderful feel to the way you move the little guy around. A great new control layout when played with a CD32 pad.

▼ DOWNERS A few fiddly puzzles that I got stuck on for ages, and the most pathetically user-hostile copy protection method I've ever seen.

THE BOTTOM LINE

I'm surprised no one else ever took this approach to adventure games, but the fact they haven't merely shows how clever and innovative Exile still is. It's a really wonderful game, although if I were buying it, I'd go for the cheaper, older, standard Amiga version.

Just go back up a moment and take a look at the price of this game. Did you see that? Yep, a whole £30. For a football game. Still, thanks to a tie in with football company Mitre you do get a top quality proper bouncy football to kick around. And it's going to give you a lot more pleasure than the disks you get with the package, that's for sure.

I didn't like Soccer Superstars. Play it for a while and I'm sure you'd agree with me. Actually, no. Don't play it for a while. Don't play it at all. Why? Well, if you thought of all the worst football gaming aspects possible, then came up with some more silly ones you'd be just about there.

FAULTS

Try the fact that when chasing after a player you will gradually catch him up but then, just when you're about within tackling distance, you'll stop catching up and jog along behind him. Then there's the fact that, when kicked, the ball moves faster diagonally across the screen than it does horizontally. And if you lurk just on the bottom corner of the box and shoot diagonally towards the far post of the goal you're bound to score. Only don't try it from the top of the screen because the angle of the pitch is incredibly somehow different and the ball goes wide of the net. And there are only two ways to hit the ball – a small tap will pass the ball to the nearest player, or you can hold the fire button down to build up power on a gauge and release when you have the power you want. Sadly the gauge is tiny and consequently unusable. And I mustn't forget to mention the way that, if a player's running along and he scrolls of the screen, he stops moving, so your passes go amiss a hell of a lot. And I also can't forget the appalling dive-at-everything goalies. And the jittery nearest-player-to-the-ball selection.

Looks like they're playing rugby, doesn't it?

No need to get so excited boys.

There may be other niggles, but after playing the game a few times to get the gist of it before sitting down and winning the cup competition (you can either play a friendly game or enter the cup, and nothing else) on my first go by scoring 44 goals in six matches, I'd had enough.

I enjoy playing all sorts of games, and football games especially, and it's true to say I did have a teeny bit of fun with this one. But that's only because I kept annihilating all my opponents and I like to win. And because I didn't have to pay to play the thing.

And at £30 (even with a 'free' football), this is a hideously overpriced, badly programmed, bare bones footie game providing very little entertainment and fun.

● PAUL MELLERICK

UPPERS Er. The football you get if you buy the game. At least that works properly.

DOWNERS The lack of options, leagues, replays, and game stats. The complete absence of any challenge thanks to the ridiculousness of the goalies. The annoying control system. In fact, everything the game has to offer.

THE BOTTOM LINE

A truly dreadful game with no redeeming features at all. Fun for a few plays, because you win by such a great margin and think you're brill, but then you come back down to earth with a bump.

Release: April

It's been a pretty grotty month all round for us here on AP. What with the news of the impending price rise imposed by our autocratic faceless bureaucrat owners, and having to do a CD as well as the coverdisks, and Steve having to revive that old lady on Walcot Street by performing an impromptu alfresco tracheotomy with a Bic™ biro sleeve, and the best game in the issue only running on an A4000, and JD being sued for tampering with the bone-marrow DNA of ex-astronaut and test pilot Chuck Yeager... Well, it's been a hectic and sweaty and quite frankly unpleasant month.

And now Ants. Okay, so it might not be in the same league as Sue trying to send wedding anniversary flowers to her parents in Portugal and inadvertently phoning Inter-Hit, the Cosa-Nostra's 0891 direct debit murder hotline, but having to review Ants is a drag and a chore nonetheless. Even though it's now no longer got the 'z' at the end of the name, I still hate it.

In a feeble attempt at humour, the ants say 'funny' phrases in little squeaky voices. Now, I can accept that some people might find this amusing the first time, but the repertoire is extremely small, and after less than ten minutes, IT GETS BLOODY ANNOYING. This is the first thing I hate about Ants.

THORAX

You are the Antmaster, the game informs you, having power over 'ant-like creatures', or pixels to you and me. (I like being the Antmaster. - Ed) You gather them by waving the mouse pointer over them and pressing the right button, and tell them where to go by clicking the left. Unfortunately, due to the random wayering of each ant, there's a good chance that even with your best intentions, ants will randomly walk into fatal objects. Invariably, it's this randomness that prevents you from completing a level, and this is the second thing I hate about Ants.

The ants must eat the enemy faces by suicidally charging them, trading an ant for a pixel of the enemy. The only animation at all is a mass of jiggling pixels and the pointer. Even on a monitor, single ants are hard to spot and single enemy dots even harder, so goodness knows what it'll be like on a TV. The game looks terrible - point three.

You can only have 100 ants at any time. If an ant eats food, it'll multiply, asexually we assume. Once they start eating and multiplying, you've got to frantically stop them before the population hits 100, because after that, all the food's wasted. The only tactic for the game is therefore to

THE THINGS THEY SAY

"I don't want to die!"

"Help, I've got fleas!"

"Hey man, what a cool game!"

"Atchoo! I've got a cold!"

"I'm stuffed!"

"I hate this job!"

Oh, you guys...

send all but a couple of ants to their deaths, then feed the two up to 100, run them down to two, and so on. The same tactic for every level - I hate this more than Jonathan Nash hates the bickering vampire couple who claimed squatter's rights in his tumble-dryer two weeks ago.

ABDOMEN

The ants have eaten all the food. You have 14 ants with which to eat 25 baddies. You can't do it, yet the game won't recognise this. You can't win but you can't escape, so you have to round up all your ants and kill them. Another good reason to hate Ants.

It's an interesting coverdisk idea, an amusing PD game or a mildly clever school project. It's certainly not a professional, mid price-range, complete game, and I hate it even more than the ginger tom which mauled my pet ring-tailed lemur last Thursday, forcing it to live out the rest of its tiny life in a mahogany sick-bed I'd carefully constructed for this very eventuality. Playing Ants made me want to die.

● CAM WINSTANLEY

UPPERS It's a good idea.

DOWNERS I hate it. And the music's crap.

THE BOTTOM LINE

It's not a puzzle game, it's an annoying exercise in limiting randomness. The only feeble challenge is to stop the ants from eating the food until you want them too. It's terrible. I hate it.

Release: Out now

So far it's been a pretty dismal month at AP. For my part, high among the top ten worst moments are finally finding someone in Canada in only to discover they were conscientiously returning my calls about Angst (the game I've been trying to review) to an elderly woman in Leamington, and being buttonholed by a seemingly inexhaustible procession of software house people complaining about our dissemination of the truth concerning the gargantuanly appalling ("Michael Jackson" - Ed), defending the publication tenaciously on the grounds that nobody likes it (some sort of underdog thing), there are only two people working on the magazine and if you buy (Clause struck. - Legal Dept) they'll give your game (Clause struck. - Legal Dept).

Super Loops, then. (We'll keep the letter 'z' at the end of the alphabet where it belongs, thanks awfully.) The deucedly odd thing about Super Loops is that it's exactly the same as Loops except aesthetically: pieces drop randomly on to a board, and by rotating and placing them you have to make shapes that join up in loops. Once you've placed a piece you can't remove it (except by using a special shape which destroys every part of an incomplete loop it touches, rather than single pieces) and every tenth loop takes you to a new level.

Build a large and complex loop and some invisible people will cheer and you get to play one of three bonus games: either more of the same but without the loops disappearing, or a puzzle where you're shown a loop, bits fall out of it and you have to return them to their correct slots, or a screen with bonus fruit you have to smother. Other modes dispense with the tenth loop/next level ploy (you play on a single level to the death), bring in a second player to help, bring in a second player to battle, and throw those bit-missing loops at you to fill in until you mess up.

HOOPS

It reminded me of two games, did Super Loops: Tetris and Pipemania, but more of The Pipester later. As with Tetris, the idea is to complete a set number of shapes, with a successfully completed shape rewarding you by disappearing so you put off fatally filling up the screen that vital moment longer. Even the pieces are similar - L-bars, rectangles and those really annoying ones you can never use and have to shove over in a corner. The tactics are sort of similar as well (look, there is a point to this. Trust me) as you build large 'outside' shapes, investing

"Large and complex"

LOOPZ

SILLY

The bonus games in Super Loops are particularly silly.

Loops. And a spaceship.

The 'Puzzle': You're shown a loop (above), and far too many bits fall out of it (below). You're given exactly that number of pieces to rebuild it. One mistake and you've lost – but the round goes on until all tiles are 'out'.

The 'Fruit': Cover all the fruit to win. The bonus round that looks exactly like the game proper. The first time I got to it, I played for ten minutes before losing and realising I wasn't, in fact, on the next level at all.

The 'Permanent': In this bonus game, the loops don't disappear when you complete them. Oh, my aching sides.

I have failed. My piece spins to its doom.

pieces that don't fit there into vaguely completing 'inside' ones. Where the games diverge is that if you mess up a shape in Super Loops (say, by rotating a piece too far or just slipping up in placing it), that shape is dead. You can't recover it by replacing the errant section, remember, as your special space-clearing piece destroys every part of an incomplete loop it touches. And, bizarrely, although random, the Super Loops pieces seem to be 'weighted' towards the big ones late in the game.

This weighting leads to terrible situations where there is clearly no room on the board for the gigantic U you've been given but, because you can't reject the piece, you have to wait for the time limit to run out (and one of your lives to be lost) before you get another bit. Which, of course, could just as easily be a similarly uselessly large piece. Audiogenic say the game 'senses' when you need to get rid of incomplete shapes and so will give you a destructive piece, but (quite apart from the question of a game 'cheating' on your behalf), this feature doesn't really work at all, delivering either too few destructive pieces or too many.

SHE STOOPS

In one game I'd carefully worked the board so I had five loops needing a piece each, but because the number of pieces exceeded the game's 'safe' total (or whatever), it decided to spew out destructive pieces. Seven of them, in fact, all in a row. And because you can't reject a piece and I obviously didn't want to remove any of my painstakingly-constructed loops-in-waiting, I had to sit there and wait for the time limit to run out for each one. O-ho.

The Pipemania comparison comes with the pipe/loop look. But unlike Pipemania there's no sense of urgency to Super Loops. You're just making the loops for the sake of it. (In Pipemania, you'll recall, you had to connect a tap spilling toxic fluid to a sluice gate.) There's a time limit to placing a piece, oh yes, and a bee-bee-bee sound as that time limit runs out (although, inexplicably, if you then place the piece the bee-bee-bee continues for a few more seconds), but it doesn't work. What you should be feeling is a desperate desire to complete that loop before some terrible disaster befalls you, but what you in fact feel is a slight irritation that there's nowhere to put this large zig-zag.

There's something fundamentally wrong with Super Loops, and it is the fact that nothing ever happens. No characters run across the screen and make off with pieces, nothing flows through the loops, there are no 'special' pieces to break it up, no cross-sections so you can salvage your work, no bombs to put out, nothing. It's just you and some pipes, for ever. The co-operative two-player mode simply doubles the misery. Only the combative game offers a bit of fun, but you'll not want to play on after the first couple of bouts. (And the obfuscative snarly-wolf background helps not at all.)

Oddly, as I played Super Loops to get screenshots, I found myself on a roll. My game came together, my tactics started working (for example, building loops in halves and not connecting the sections until the last moment so if I blew it I could still save the day) and I gallumphed through the bonus levels. But I wasn't involved in the game. There was no incentive to keep winning. And that, folks, is the reason I can't understand why Audiogenic have bestowed new life upon this most dependably dull of puzzlers.

● JONATHAN NASH

UPPERS It's £15, and the music's okay in a sub-Bubble and Squeak way. The animated congratulatory bits. Supports mouse, CD32 joypad and two-button stick control. It's hard drive-installable.

DOWNERS The pieces have identical shading, so once the screen's more than half-full you have the devil of a job making things out. Later levels just scatter blocks on the board. Two-player games go on at the same speed and difficulty forever. There's just no excitement to it. And you can't use the keyboard to enter the passwords.

THE BOTTOM LINE

A one-note puzzle game ill-advisedly resurrected and given a quick polish. To be fair to the game, you can play it strategically, but there's no incentive to do so. Once you've played level one, you've played the game.

29 PERCENT

"Oh God," I thought. "My first review. They're going to give me a flight sim, aren't they? Or a wargame. Aagghh. No. Help." Imagine, then, my relief when JD handed me a copy of Whizz, a nice, cute, harmless 'isometric platform game'. What nicer way to enter the world of game assessment than to play a rabbit in a coat, venturing through a world of penguins, starfish and living chess pieces? Unfortunately, it didn't take long before the colourful and cheerful facade fell away to reveal a game that is in fact anything but nice or harmless.

Whizz is a fast isometric 3D game, one which would like to think it's a platformer but unfortunately is not. The box proudly states that the game's 3D perspective is the next step forward in platformers. And who knows?

Perhaps they're right, but I'm afraid that Whizz fails to deliver the goods. Rather than being a platformer, it actually turns out to be more of a maze game, where you have to guide your rabbit chum from the start of each level to (no!) the end, where a hot air balloon awaits to transport him to (surprised gasp) the next level.

There are four worlds, each of which looks cheerful enough, with nice parallax scrolling in the background. There are a few rudimentary puzzles to solve along the way, and it all looks jolly fun.

Or perhaps it might be if it weren't for the game's most obvious fault, the control system. You see, the whole game is geared towards doing things with great haste, there being a harsh time limit imposed on each level (more of which later). The problem is that, this being an isometric game, when you push up on the joystick the rabbit moves diagonally up and right. This can get very confusing when you're dashing around frantically trying to guess your way to the end of the level. It can also be irritating, as can the instances when Whizz (the rabbit) decides to take on a will of his own and jump in a direction other than the one you wanted.

The foul control system serves to enhance the game's second, and most heinous, problem – the time limits. So, a game like this probably needs time limits, but not ones of this magnitude. They leave you little or no room for error – if you stray off course more than a couple of times you can pretty much forget about finishing the level before the time runs out. This means that you can't try to complete the little sub quests like launching the four rockets you find on each level (which, incidentally, is the only way you can get extra lives). Lack of time also means that enemies are just things you try to jump straight over rather than fight.

WH

When I were a lad, a whizz was something y

Let's make one thing perfectly clear. I hate this game. I loathe it with an intensity unparalleled in the known universe. It's not the worst game in the world by any means, but it's just so... so... so infuriating. The control system is truly a thing spawned from the loins of Satan; the fact that finding your way to the exit is mainly guesswork and luck is a patently unclear flaw; and the vicious time limit is the product of a cruel and diseased mind. But these aren't the only impure traits that Whizz has to offer. Oh no.

"Listen to something on the radio instead"

Let's move on to the sound effects and music, shall we? Although they are not a major contributor to a game's greatness, the sounds which come out of the monitor are nonetheless part of the gaming experience. So it's probably appropriate that a game such as Whizz should have annoying music and virtually non-existent sound effects. Thankfully, you can turn either or both off, and listen to something decent on the radio instead. Better still, you could just turn the computer off, and do something more interesting than playing crap games like this. Such as tearing all the hair off your body with sellotape.

The baddies which you come up against on your quest are less than impressive. Due to the time limit it's more sensible just to jump straight over them rather than bothering to kill them, but should you decide to indulge in violence, you'll find to your dismay that initiating a spinning attack (the only way to kill baddies or break through barriers) causes you to lose some of your energy.

Indeed, all the way through Whizz you get the creeping feeling that the game hates you. Everything it does seems to be geared towards hindering your progress unfairly, like how you can't jump off lots of platforms you clearly should be able to – a sinister and disturbing contrivance to LIMIT THE PLAYER'S FREE WILL, or how when you die, you're sent all the way back to the start of the level (tool of the devil), or how there's no save facility or password system. (Aargh! Begone, begone, for thou art truly evil!)

Phew. Okay, now all that's off my chest, and because we at AP are all consummate professionals, we shall allow Whizz the chance to defend itself. The graphics are all right – nice and cute and, er, stuff. The puzzles, though not in any way taxing, offer some variety in the gameplay, and the game recognises a two-button joystick, which is a good job because trying to play it with a single-button one is a joke. Erm, and that's about it. Whizz isn't completely awful, but it's certainly below average.

● RICHARD DOIDGE

UPPERS Nice, colourful graphics. It's fast, and certainly a challenge.

DOWNERS Annoying control system, foul and unfair time limits, purely incidental baddies and collectables, nasty gameplay quirks and really naff sound effects.

THE BOTTOM LINE

The idea of a fast 3D platformer is a good one, but Whizz falls a long way short of the mark. The shoddy control ruins the game, and it seems that the time limit has been made excessive to try to make up for the baddies and puzzles not being challenging enough.

SWORD OF HONOUR

The coward does it with a kiss, the brave man with a sword...

Runs on: A500, A600
Author: Dynafeld Systems
Publisher: Megatronix, 21 Tiled House Lane, Brierley Hill, West Midlands, DY5 4LG
Price: £20
Release: Out now

At least it's got an interesting title. Can you guess what it's all about without looking at the screenshots? (And no peeking.) Yep, it's ninja time. And a ninja with a quest. The Sword of Honour (hence the name) has been stolen by some evil people and, hired hood that you are, it's your job to get it back. Time to fight.

The game is simply laid out, but scratch the surface and you'll find some interesting bits. Each level, of which there are four main ones and a small fifth one, is split into single screens. On some of these screens there's more than one exit. You might be able to go up or down as well as left or right as normal. These exits are also very subtly drawn into the scenery, but after a while you get used to them. What this means for the player is exploration. There are plenty of items for you to collect – some good, some great. And some you can even use as bribes to get past people you'd rather not fight. Don't offer the wrong item, though, or they'll take it off you anyway and still try and whack you round the head with a big stick. As well as items to use and/or bribe people with there're weapons lying around the place that come in handy later on.

So there you have it. Go from screen to screen, double back on yourself, collect something, use something, find a weapon, bribe someone and then finish the level. It's that simple. And thanks to a pleasant mouse control system (you can use a joystick as well, but the mouse is better) you can access all sorts of moves quickly and, more importantly, get out of trouble when you need to.

BUSHIDO

There's plenty of attention to detail, okay animation and some really cool scenery and characters. But although the game is polished and playable, it's just too dull and too easy. After a couple of plays, I really got into it and liked wandering around from screen to screen collecting things and all that. But a couple of hours later I found myself on level three, doing the same things I'd been doing on level one. Only the graphics were different. A bit more play (I'm a sucker for punishment) finally got me onto level four, and not long after that level five beckoned.

The reason for this rapid progress had more to do with the infinite continues than my gameplaying skill (although obviously that played its part), and even though you only continue with the lives and items you had when you started the level, and don't get all your lives back, cracking the first couple of levels gave me enough spare lives to make easy work of levels three and four. I've stopped at the end of level five because there's a stupidly hard creature I can't beat. And I'm bored.

Sword of Honour is a passable idea, and lots of it works (the level design, the characters, the animation and the backgrounds), but the initial hook of playing something that requires a bit more thought than usual quickly fades and you're left with a repetitive walk about and fight thing.

• PAUL MELLERICK

"Go up or down as well"

UPPERS Sword of Honour looks great with some smooth animation and scenery. And for the first hour or so you're always wondering what's going to appear on the next screen.

DOWNERS But after a while you realise it's just the same level as before with a different looking character in it and a slightly altered background. There's just no variety. Ever.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Initially intriguing and enjoyable, it quickly turns dull and samey. If only there's was something a bit more substantial to it.

55 PERCENT

THE BOTTOM LINE

For some reason the A1200 game doesn't work with an A1200. At all. And never will, I suspect.

IMAGINE THE WORLD OF TOMORROW

AND WIN A CD32! AND £100 OF ACID GAMES!

CDs are, we are informed, the future of computer gaming. Floppies are well and truly dead. If it ain't silver, it ain't happening. Apparently.

So this month, never ones to shy from the latest electrical technology, we have taken this new medium into our bear-like embrace and produced an optional 'CD edition' of AMIGA POWER. (And certainly not because we're practising to be a PC magazine. Or anything.) You may even be reading it now.

JOIN THE REVOLUTION

Or, perhaps, owing to financial restrictions or just plain fear, you don't own a CD32. If that's the case, rejoice, because our long-standing pals at Acid Software (or, at least, their UK-based agents) have volunteered a CD32 and £100-worth of games to play on it, including AP-adored titles like Super Skidmarks 2, and the AGA-only Roadkill and Guardian.

Their reasons for this unexpected bout of generosity? Sheer philanthropy, mainly, but also a desire to plug ABC, the special programming language they use to write all their games, which is being released to the public in late April and could make you a hero.

So enter, and if you win you could always return to your newsagent and buy the 'CD edition' of AP, pouring more pounds into the pockets of our spreadsheet-sporting 'superiors'.

THE RULES

1. Employees of Future Publishing and Acid Software may not enter.
2. Entries arriving after 31st May, 1995 will remain locked in the past.
3. The editor's decision is final.

You can store music on CD, computer games, books, and even feature-length movies. What next? Well, that's what we want you to determine. Tell us briefly, including illustrations if necessary, about something else that could be compressed onto these magical silver platters. You might envisage a CD-Wardrobe, for example, featuring a CD player connected to a knitting machine and some sort of high-speed unpicking device. Or a CD-Bank, which scans in £5 notes, checks them for authenticity, shreds them, and then prints them out again on some sort of laser printer at the request of its customers. You see? Whatever you hit upon, send your invention to A Boot Stamping On A Human Face Compo, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW, to arrive by May 31st, 1995.

Oh yes, and, sinisterly, Acid have another motive for all this: to obtain the names and addresses of their AP-reading fans so they can keep them updated on their forthcoming games. If you don't wish this to happen to you, say so.

I CHALLENGE

One of these days we'll learn not to do this again.

As we opened the 563rd entry featuring a ripped-off Street Fighter 2 character brought up on the streets of The Bronx/Detroit/Chicago, we began to question the validity of this whole design-a-new-combatant-for-Shadow Fighter competition. What is it with you people? Do you think that because you've drawn a chef's hat and an apron on your character we won't notice he's been traced from a picture of Ken?

Fortuitously, quite a few of your pictures and complicated background histories made us laugh and the day was saved. Our urge to destroy the expensive Sony television offered to the overall winner passed, and we arranged the entries in reverse order. Like this.

THE EVEN WE WOULD SHY AWAY FROM THIS ONE AWARD

THE LUCKY WE KEPT READING AWARD

for Joona Palaste of Finland

"The six funniest fighters ever in a computer game!" boasted Joona of his (or her) (sorry, Joona) characters. Five of them were crap, but we fell in love with Number Six. "Mairiam is a sweet damsel from France. She studies art in the Paris University and likes flowers very much. She has a special fondness for peas. She took up fighting because it looked like fun, and it could just be the right way for her to get a boyfriend." Her attacks – the gentle slap, currant bun and kiss of despair – all do "little damage." Natch.

THE WINNER! AND ANOTHER ONE!

When all is said and done, when all the entries have been examined and all the people who eagerly told us their ages for no discernible reason other than to excuse the poor quality of their work have been processed, there can be only one winner. Except there's not. Cleverly analysing the mighty beings of AMIGA POWER, several entrants submitted Scary Clown Characters. It came down to a contest between the imposingly well-drawn Bubba by 'LG', and Chris Brown of Finchley's characterfully special-moved Wacky Weirdo. Unable to make a decision we instead commanded Gremlin to supply TWO slightly less expensive televisions. 'LG' and Brown's composite clown shall be BATTLING THE EXQUISITE EVIL OF PUPAZZ in Shadow Fighter 2 soon. Very soon. Oh yes.

"Gill was born in New York," begins Reynolds. "At the age of seven, his parents were killed by joy riders." We eschew the obvious parent/age joke. "He was forced to live in the sewers, where he drank toxic water that mutated him with a half-decomposed fish." If only he'd gone to live with, say, some relatives, eh?

THE BIG FOUR!

NUMBER FOUR: GRISTLE

Jed Richards of Bethsheda came up trumps with Gristle the Butcher. Driven mad by a three-week battle with a revived cow carcass in his own cold store, Gristle uses his special knives to hurt people. His special moves are a bit predictable, but he's out of the ordinary – AND THAT IS WHAT COUNTS.

NUMBER THREE: MR

BLACK/RUBBERBANDMAN

The benefits of multiple entries, eh? Paul Naylor of Cardigan exploited ruthlessly the cinematic preferences and elastic-band-ball-construction hobbies of AMIGA POWER with this Reservoir Dogs character and, er, rubber band man. Mr Black can perform moves such as the 'gun barrel roll' (where he forward rolls and fires up at his opponent), the 'deadly shades' (revealing, quite properly, that he has no eyes) and the 'stuck in the middle' (where he boots his opponent around the arena). Rubberbandman can fire elastic bands at his opponent, roll himself into a gigantic ball and bounce upon them, or perform the dreaded 'fast kick' ("Like a 'lightning kick' but more rubbery," as Naylor says).

NUMBER TWO: THE PROFESSOR

A particular favourite of JD, Barry Horrex of Stowmarket's sinister scientist refrains from engaging in physical combat, instead standing there and pressing buttons on secret gizmos to confound his opponent.

SENSIBLE WORLD OF SOCCER

(Renegade)

SWOS, eh? Swell or swiz? Terrific or tosh? Brilliant or bug-ridden beyond belief? The debate continues. Maybe you ought to hurry up with that free bug-fixing up-date disk, eh Sensible? Happy punters note that next issue we will actually be carrying the elusive fixing disk on the front of the mag, along with a new, improved demo of the fully working and totally great Sensible World Of Soccer.

We shall also be lining up individual members of Sensible Software against a brick wall and forcing them to endure half an hour of Jonathan's Aled Jones tape at maximum volume whilst Jonathan Nash pours banana flavoured yoghurt down their socks. And Sue will take some photos. Let that be a lesson to you, Sensible Software.

"I have found a cheat," claims a mystery person whose letter accidentally blew out of the window before I had a chance to note down the name and address, "which allows you to sign players free. Go to a team with an expensive forward, such as Manchester United (Cantona, £7 million). Look then for someone you wish to buy, say Collymore for £3m.

"Attempt to buy Collymore and the person at the bottom of Forest's Squad (Lee, 550K) in a swap deal with Cantona where no money changes hands. They should take this (if not, buy another player) and when you go into your squad you will have Collymore and Cantona but no Lee. When you go back into Forest's Squad Lee is not there but in his place they will have some guy worth millions!"

MORTAL KOMBAT 2

(Virgin)

Considering the number of months the hoo-ha over the original Mortal Kombat and what-we-had-alleged-about-it took to die down, I was quite prepared (paraffin, box of matches and disused metal dustbin at hand) to totally ignore the AP47 Mortal Kombat 2 tips - disgusting the majority of this month's Complete Control mailbag and get straight on with the juicy new stuff. But then I thought: "But maybe it'll be useful." And then I thought "And maybe it'll help to fill up some space too." So here it is: Everything you ever wanted to know about Mortal Kombat 2, which we either got wrong or forgot to mention the first time round.

"Oi! Pelley! No! You do not go around giving out false information about Mortal Kombat 2. Now pack y'bags and let me, the great Dale 'Dimrill' Bird of Cannock, explain the ones you got wrong.

Then instead of knocking just one head off your opponent, you will knock three heads off."

"Just to clear up the Mortal Kombat cheat that you printed last issue." Darren Lawrence of Essex, you'd better make this good.

"To get it to work, what you actually have to do is to go to the options menu and position the cursor on Done, and then type in the alphabet A to Z, press the Space Bar and repeat this about five times. And then, and only then, will the Diagnostics menu appear allowing you to cheat to your heart's content."

"Also," Guy Cocker of Filey, we hate you. "If anyone would be stupid enough to turn off the blood, they can do so by typing FIONA on the main menu."

BLOOD

Stuck in Bloodnet? Well get your teeth into these hints from Rich Pelley.

Here at AMIGA POWER, our views of tips vary enormously between various members of the team. For Cam and J Nash, they fall nothing short of "notes typed up by the Devils own secretary, ridding you of months of value and gameplaying pleasure in one foul swoop". Steve and Paul, on the other hand, believe that tips are only worthwhile "if they are all about football management games", while JD most sees them in the single light of "someone else's job".

In fact, it is only myself (and Sue) who believe that tips are indeed A Good Thing, providing you with an invaluable source of information for you to dip into at will, saving your bacon when you get stuck and thus in fact adding life and value to games that you would otherwise have no choice but to discard.

Bloodnet is just such a game. We are loath to print a complete solution if all you are going to do is you it to 'cheat' your way through the entire game. Yet we feel it our duty to provide some point of reference for when you get stuck.

A happy compromise would therefore seem, not in this case a lead-you-by-the-hand walk-through, but a brief summation of the goals you must achieve and the order you should do them in to finish the game the quickest possible way. And that, spookily enough, is exactly what we've got here...

SUPER LEAGUE

Interview with a manager.

I needed help. I needed the best. And so I'd gone to the top.

"Mr Venerables? Mr Faragher is here, shall I send him in?"

Moments later the obliging secretary ushered me into the palatial offices of Tony Venerables, the finest manager in the land. An acrid cloud of stale cigar smoke hung like early morning mist over the room. Just by the door a huge brown overcoat with fur-trimmed lapels was attempting to smother an unsuspecting coatstand. A half empty bottle of ("Whiskas" - Ed) stood among the paperwork that was strewn across the massive mahogany desk. An enormous black, leather chair on the far side of the desk swung round. The interview began.

"Folkford United eh?" Tony chuckled.

"Well, we've all got to start somewhere. Let's have a look at your team list.

"Well, you've got a few promising players here. Matt Parkinson's capable of going all the way with the right sort of treatment, particularly up front. In the midfield you've got the lad Reeves, he'll do okay when he's a couple of years older. Nick Moody's a competent enough defender, and Brian Evans is a decent goalkeeper. They'll be your backbone.

"The first thing you need to do is get hold of a good quality defender. The set-up you've got there is going to leak goals like a rusty sieve. Still, you're going to need a bit of money to do that. You could afford to let one of your forwards go to make a bit of cash, depending on the formation you're going to play. Nigel Jenkins is probably expendable as well; in my experience goalkeepers rarely, if ever, get injured so Evans will do you. Finally there's the bank manager. He'll probably let you up your overdraft to around 780 grand. Then when you've got some money, and we're talking about spending a good £250,000 as a minimum here, have a good look around the transfer market. Don't forget to use your scout on players, you want somebody who's playing at below their full potential. If the kind of player you want isn't up for sale have a good read of Emlyn's column in the papers you'll often find out from him when a player's feeling unhappy and fancies a move before he actually gets transfer-listed. And don't be daunted if the manager knocks you back the first time you approach him to buy a player. Persistence pays off in this game.

"Once you've got the team you're looking for it becomes a question of getting the right training for the lads. I've made a few notes on this pad - take it with you when you go. One other thing to bear in mind is that if you've got a gifted player he may well be able to play in more than one position on the pitch. The kind of training you give him is then crucial. If you've got a midfielder/attacker and he spends all his time practicing his shooting, he's not going to be much good when you suddenly ask him to fill that holding midfield role.

"You've also got to make sure your players stay sweet. When they get unhappy they'll come and ask you for a pay rise. How you deal with that is up to you and your style of management but be warned, when you give a player a rise it won't be long before he's blabbing to his mates in the bath and then you'll have a herd at the door. Now, let's talk about the future. Although you may become attached to them, Folkford are not the team that you can take right to the top. The ground isn't big enough to get the sort of money you'll need for a top-flight team and, knowing Les of old I think I can safely say that you won't see him stumping up large amounts of cash for improvements. No, in the end you're going to have to switch sides.

"When that time comes there are a couple of things to look out for. You'll probably only be offered jobs at clubs that are lower in the leagues than you. Take a look at them. Firstly check out their ground capacity. You must go to a big club. Secondly, use the Who's Who to check through all their players. If they were bought for more money than they're now worth, the chances are that the current manager has been letting things slip a bit. That's the kind of side you want to lead. After a few weeks of your training regimes the team'll start to respond and you'll be on your way to the top.

"Given that you won't join your new club until the end of the season, another tip is to check how many players of each position they've got. If the club you're going to join is lacking in any department (Tony looked from side to side and leaned over the desk towards me) try putting your favourite players in those positions up for sale. You never know, their current manager may well give you a ring and you can sell him a player cheaply and that'll make sure that you join a stronger squad with a player you know well.

"Other than that son, you're on your own. You were a good player for me in your day and I'm sure you'll be a cracking manager. Just remember to be patient. You musn't count your chickens when you're making omelettes. You've got my number. Give me a call if you get stuck..."

Mumbling my thanks I backed towards the door, hopeful that a few years from now I might even fill the great man's shoes myself.

● STEVE FARAGHER

These are good training schedules, although not necessarily the best. Bear in mind that players don't like doing the same training all the time, that they won't respond well to doing the same thing twice in a week and that all the strength and fitness regimes (Sprinting, Endurance, Weights and the like) take a couple of weeks to have their full effect.

THE LAST RESORT

with Rich Pelley

Worried about the BBC's bias? Fearing for your chances in the local elections? Whipless wonders got you in a tizz? Well don't read this. These are Amiga tips.

I'm afraid that, in spite of severe brain racking, I just couldn't come up with a decent introduction for this month's Resort. So I wondered if, just this once, you wouldn't mind filling one in yourself:

 (Thanks.)

EXILE

Q "I wrote to you in issue 45 asking for codes on Fatman, but this time I am really stuck on the game called Exile, number 8 in the all-time top 100 in issue 37. Please, please, please etc help me. I have played on it for one month and don't seem to be able to get anywhere."

Rob Hewitt, Shoesburyness

A Asked (for no specified reason) to name my personal all-time top three games on the Amiga, Exile would come in at a not-to-be-sniffed-at 3 shortly behind Gravity Force 2 and the vastly under-rated Parasol Stars. So yes – eliciting some advice would certainly be an apt gesture considering the hours of pleasure Exile has given me over the years. Besides, anyone

LOOSE ENDS

EYE OF THE BEHOLDER 2 SPECIAL – THE CASE CONTINUES

You know, even after all these months, the most popular request I get here at the Last Resort month after month is still to quit immediately from all my responsibilities at AMIGA POWER and get the first person I can find to string me up from the nearest tree. The second most popular is for help on one EYE OF THE BEHOLDER 2, and even though I get the feeling that advice is being repeated somewhat, I've long passed the point of caring. Please help the following EOTB2 wonderers, if you can...

Q "After escaping the frost giant lair in EOTB2, I assumed the next stage was through a door on the second level of the temple, but I can't find the key in spite of looking all over the Azure Tower."
Sly Pig Coleman, Derbyshire

Q "I'm really stuck on EOTB2, firstly on the puzzle in the dungeon several floors down where there is a three by three grid of pressure pads and a carving on one of the walls that says 'You must leave many things'. I'd also like to know how long I have to wait before I can rest my party again in this section (visions of death and destruction plague my dreams every time I attempt to do this). Secondly, on the level above the entrance to the temple of Darkmoon I've gone into one of the teleports and found myself in a room with jewels on the walls and several skulls and a piece of soft ground in the centre. How do I get out? And what are the jewels for?"

Jonathan Reynolds, Tyne and Weir

Q "Please could you help me? How do you open the wall behind the door on the Medusa level of EOTB2?"
Robert Hellyer, Dyfed

Q "Yes, EOTB2 again. I'm sixty years young, and although doing quite well, find myself in the underground caverns in the area where you can't rest; containing the Margoyle (giant bats). Have been down stairs with the giant ants, collected three horses, headed NWE, grabbed all the gear, spider key and black key, cleared all rooms and returned upstairs. After nearly forty hours of searching all the rooms, I still seem to be a black key short."

John Gaves, Kent

Q "Nnnnngh, double nnnnngh, and (even) triple nnnnngh. I'm crap at CANNON FODDER and, in spite of what Cam told me in his indispensable guide in issue 35, I still can't get past mission 8.2 without my all my guys getting rocketed/shot by the other gits in green. And if I don't get help soon, my veins will blow up and the whole universe will become covered in disgustingly sticky blood."

Neil Thomas, Northants

Q "Thirty minutes ago I received a free copy of ALADDIN (courtesy of AP) but, dammit, I can't find the level two exit. I've collected both scarab pieces, so it can't be that. Please help."

Colin Meney, Ayrshire

Q "I am stuck on level one of the watchtower in PERIHELION. I've read that the key phrase is the third from left in the first, the first from right in the second and so fourth, but of what?"

Richard Baddiel, Birmingham

Q "I have recently bought LION HEART and am very happy with it. The only problem is that I get stuck on this one bit. Every time I get to the running Dinosaur level I reach the end of the air ship and find a swinging platform. I can get on this but then can't get any further. I tried pulling down (for five minutes) and nothing much happens. Is there a platform I can't see or is there a fault in the program?"

Q "Is there a way to get infinite money or a way to be any team on GRAHAM TAYLOR'S SOCCER CHALLENGE on the Amiga?"
Gary Hughes, Somewheresville

Q "I have found the Alchemist in DARKMERE but am unable to find his three potions."
Mark Coleman

CASES CLOSED

Many thanks and even a little piece of our heart goes out to the following do-gooders.

SABRE TEAM

Q Adam Chidgey of Gosport wanted a cheat. And, once again, the Last Resort seems to have come up trumps.

A "Start the game as normal but once in the game click on the Blue Print icon. Numbering what appears one (at the top) to four (at the bottom), click on them in the order: three, four, one, two, two, four, one and three. Leave the screen by pressing the top left arrow and you will now have infinite action points, and by pressing one to five you can also skip levels. Note that if you actually complete a level, the cheat will have to be reactivated."

Stuart Evan, Staines

SECOND SAMURAI

Q "How do I reach the last level," asked Ahmad Aizayer of Saudi Arabia, simply.

A "With the code 5ALIC1JF." Craig Ritchie, Bradford

BENEATH A STEEL SKY

Q Despite the solution we ran in issue 38, over the months various people have still been getting stuck in parts of this great point-'n'-click-'em-up. The bit where you have to swing into the room with the orifice has been a bit of a favourite, but (and in reply to Dimitri Buytoert of Belgium's letter of two months ago) it looks like the definitive solution may at long last be at hand.

A "The part that has so far been missed is when you get to the room with the tissue samples and liquid nitrogen. You must insert Anita's LINC card into the computer to infect the tissue with the virus before you do the business with the tongs, orifice, rope etc."

Craig Biggins, Blackburn

FRONTIER

Q "What the hell is he talking about?" wondered a nation as Gary Blackney of Bootle wibbled on about some mysterious device he kept seeing and expressing his desire to know what it did. Fortunately, others were more clued up than you or I...

A "The device in question is in fact a camera, obtained from the Navy and needed for the Military missions. The rank of major is required for a surveillance mission involving the camera. And, don't worry - all the other icons are in the manual."

Gavin Beatty, Herts and Alex Smyth, Sheffield

CANNON FODDER 2

Q Cameron Winstanley of Bath admitted back in issue 46 that, although he has managed to complete Mission 9 phase 2, the solution he adopted was, and I quote, "hard, hard, HARD!" Needless to say, this was because Cam was BUMBLING LIKE AN IDIOT WHOSE BRAIN HAD RECENTLY BEEN REPLACED BY A CAULIFLOWER. A far easier solution, it transpires, is at hand.

A "Easy! Easy! Easy! The solution to this phase is almost fool-proof and so should be of no problem at all. As soon as you start on the in-game screen, press SPACE to switch to rockets and immediately shoot the top left corner of the tent beneath you. This will destroy the tent and car that is heading towards you but your car should remain unblemished. Now shoot the soldier that comes for you and rocket the tent at the top from where you are. Stroll over to your unscathed mobile and drive up behind the tree at the top of the screen. Once you are there, step on the gas and travel at top speed along then right and out through the small gap in the middle of the enclosure. Turn left and stop near to the fence at (1). You should now see about four cars at (2) rather stupidly trying to drive through the fence and a tank. Position yourself between the tank and the cars (3) and it will blow them up for you. Then simply drive around a bit near the fence and eventually the tank will blow itself up.

Now drive right until you get to the jump. Leap the fence, drive around and kill the rocket man before running over all the little blokes. Get out of your car at the turret and blow the grenade-proof hut into oblivion. Pick up the rockets if you can be bothered, and get back in your car. Then run over any remaining blokes (drive along the narrow fenced section along the top) and bingo."

who can live in a place called Shoesbury and quite happily admit to the fact on an open basis has got to need all the help that they can get.

Open the first door (I've started telling you what to do now, by the way) by dropping an object on the button (map one). At the bottom of the wind tunnel (map two), if you shoot the life craft down into the second pond to the left, you will find a sort of nasty place where a clam sucks, quite monotonously, at everything. Use the life craft to block the gap which the clam lies below, and you will be granted access to a small underwater cavern. Somewhere around this blue delight you should notice a small inaccessible area with slimmers blobbing up and down. Gently coax one out via an inconsistent pestering of bullets, and feed it some coronium. Place the dormant slime on the life craft and press the button so that the door closes and the life craft floats up.

To complete the conversion of slime to coronium (map three), you need to expose the dormant slimes to acid. You should have encountered a Happy fish by now - use this in the isolated chamber to the West near the piranha nest. Directly above this chamber is the place of slime conversion. Insert the slime in the slot at the top, go to the stone portal below and aim a few shots at the switch on the overhang. Now just fling the coronium up the wind shaft.

And take a gander at these maps (which Derryn Hazelhurst sent in ages ago, and I've finally got around to using - cheers, Derryn, and I'll see if we can sort you out some sort of prize for your efforts), all should become clear.

UPGRADE

Q "I am a 15-year-old male who is looking for a way to upgrade my Amiga 500 to an Amiga 1200. Is this possible? If so could you tell me what I would need and where I can get it from? Do you know how much it would cost? I know it's a lot to ask but please could you also give me the address for Amiga?"

Steven Meadows, Oxon

A Here at AMIGA POWER, our knowledge of technical matters involving the Amiga is limited. We can just about format a floppy disk, or install a program onto hard disk, but just because we'd rather spend out time whipping each other's butts at Skidmarks 2 or blasting each other's brains out in Gravity Force 2 than worrying about monitor pin-out configurations and printer set-ups, that's our prerogative, and it certainly doesn't make us bad people. OF COURSE YOU CAN'T YOU MINDLESS BABOON. WHERE THE HELL HAVE YOU BEEN? AND WHY ON EARTH HAVE YOU WRITTEN TO THE LAST RESORT TO ASK ANYWAY?

If there was some way of turning back the clock to provide another chance to do this month's Last Resort, I think that I'd commit suicide. Fortunately, such a means has yet to be devised, which at least gives you another month to post things to:

BACK ISSUE OF THE MONTH

AP42 - OCTOBER 1994

In the year 2030 AD, the Science Museum in London will almost certainly contain a small glass case displaying an AP42 - one of the very finest APs of 1994. A bit of card next to it will draw your attention to the three coverdisks, with their demos of Tower Assault, Theme Park, Ruff and Tumble and Bubble and Squeak. It will also highlight the award-winning Games Vs Reality feature inside, the magnificent four-page reviews of Super Stardust and Theme Park, and Cam's Breakfast Sandwich. Having surveyed it in awe for a few moments, you can then go and look at Archimedes' Screw. Invest in the future with your own copy of AP42. Today.

BUDGETS

It's been a peculiar month you know. Very strange. Still, the show must go on eh? And that means budget reviews.

Runs On: A500, A600, A1200
Publisher: Hit Squad
Price: £17
Release: May

Well, what can I say? We're talking about a legend of a game, here. From its appearance on the greatest games machine of all time to its viral-like infection of other formats, it's a great game. Some would say A Game Of Champions. And now it's on budget.

Yep, any reason you may have had for not going out and buying this should now be made completely insignificant with this imminent budget release. I mean, if you want a top shoot-'em-up, then this is the game for you.

If you want a game that will tax your tactical gaming abilities, then Cannon Fodder fits the bill perfectly. Or maybe you just want to get hold of one of the best Amiga games of all time. Again, you should buy this.

For those who want details... it's a war game. But more a game about war, than one of those strategy things we're used to. Using a small squad of soldiers drawn from a limited pool, you must complete all 24 missions which are split into phases totalling 72 in all.

Yep, 72 levels of point-and-click action for you to battle through. Don't worry about using the mouse instead of the joystick (shoot-'em-up fans are a bit protective about their joysticks, you see), because thanks to a great and easy-to-use control system, you couldn't ask for a better way of moving about.

The sole purpose of each phase of Cannon Fodder is to finish it, either by blowing everything up or by blowing everything up and rescuing people. Of course, it's not simply a case of running around without a care in the world, there are other soldiers out to get you, all sorts of terrains to stumble through and many other fiendish hazards to tax your grey matter. Just wait until you start trying to control some of the vehicles.

The game design, difficulty level, rewarding gameplay, control system and sheer amount of fun that Cannon Fodder throws at you, are all of the highest standard. Truly a gaming classic deserving your utmost attention.

● PAUL MELLERICK

THE BOTTOM LINE

One of the best games ever. On anything. Ever. And still a gem that has more than stood the test of time. Get it before they don't make it any more. (Not likely to happen, but you never know).

LEGENDS OF VALOUR

Runs On: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Kixx

Price: £13

Release: Out now

Can you cast your mind back to just over two years ago? Any idea where you were and what you were doing? Nope, me neither. But reading through our back issues, number 23 to be precise, I can see that at one point we were reviewing Legends Of Valour (well, erstwhile editor Mark Ramshaw was. And he gave it 88%). And in an absolutely amazing coincidence (and not at all in a convoluted and drawn-out intro), it's out on budget. Now.

The first thing that deserves mentioning is that when released Legends Of Valour cost a whacking £40. Yes, £40. For an Amiga game. Now though you can catch this at a 'proper' budget price of £13. And believe me, you'll want to catch it.

I could spend days playing this, and still only scratch the surface. And strangely, for me at least, I still want to play it. It could be the lovely texture-mapped graphics (who said Doom on the Amiga?), it could be the level of detail and it might even be the size of the game (big is an understatement).

But whatever the reason, it's a top quality game and no mistake. A little daunting to start with, it's one of those games that you have to read the manual before you can get started, but once you're in, you're hooked.

Wandering around the town is easy thanks to the control system, interacting with people, although abrupt, is good fun and generally getting to grips with your new surroundings are what draw you into the game. Then as you find somewhere to live, get jobs and errands to do and quests to take part in, you quickly find your feet. Of course there is a purpose to all this, your missing cousin Sven, but you've also got to remember to look after yourself, and there are plenty of people prepared to take you for a ride if you're not careful.

I could go on for pages about this great game, using more superlatives and describing lots more about it, but that would be futile and take up too much valuable space. Instead, just get out, get hold of it and then see for yourself.

● PAUL MELLERICK

THE BOTTOM LINE

A top role player. A bit slow on anything other than an A1200, and if you haven't got a second drive, you're going to have a serious case of disk-swapping hand. But other than that, it's a quality game and still very fresh and enjoyable two years down the line. And it's cheap.

89 PERCENT

IMPACT

Runs On: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Audiogenic

Price: £10

Release: Out now

Abat. Bricks. And a ball. That bounces. It's a simple premise. And as some clever bloke found out at the dawn of computer gaming, it's really good fun. Simple, yes, but fun in the extreme.

But things don't stay still in the fast moving world of games, oh no. And so a simple bat and ball game gets loads of power-ups, wacky level designs and if you're really lucky even some decent collision detection. In fact, you could say, it's a whole new ball game.

And with this version of the game, called Impact, you get a handy, dandy level designer as well. Allowing you to come up with some silly, simple or downright dangerous levels to add to the 80 already there.

It's all good stuff so far, but there's something not quite right when you get down to playing the game. Some of the levels are downright boring and others are just stupid, but it's not just level design. Playing just isn't enough fun. Everything works fine, even if the mouse control is a little over sensitive, but you always get the sense that when you lose a ball, it wasn't the fact that you weren't in the right place and at right time, but that the game had already decided you were going to lose a life.

Yes, I know that makes me sound like a paranoid madman, but that the only way I can describe it. It's cheap, playable and intriguing to start with, but eventually becomes slow, repetitive and slightly annoying. But it scores points for the user-friendly level editor.

● PAUL MELLERICK

THE BOTTOM LINE

Nostalgic and fun to begin, but not interesting or spectacular enough to keep you going for more than a few days. Although the level editor is really nice.

A-10 TANK KILLER

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Kixx

Price: £17

Release: Out now

Due to childhood experiences far too precious and wondrous for me to do justice to here, the A-10 has always been my favourite aeroplane. It's squat, brutal and ugly, but it works, and it's got a gun the size of a granny flat stuck to the front. Cool.

Cue sharp inhalations and all-round tutting as I play A-10 Tank Killer for a few hours and discover that it's not only unbelievably clunky (even on an A1200) but they've also got the gun noise wrong. A burst of fire from the awesome rotary-barrelled Avenger cannon sounds like a chainsaw as it blats milk bottle-sized depleted uranium shells downrange at an alarming rate, but in the game, it goes banga, banga, banga. The same as every other gun in every other flight sim.

Obviously, on its own, this wouldn't warrant the average score, but it's a good indication of how much of the game fails to hit the spot, and cancels out much of the good stuff. There are around 20 missions set in Europe and the Gulf, and for the most part, they're well planned and imaginative, combining storylines and secondary characters with all that fly, bomb, shoot stuff. You're not the centre of attention either, which I liked, so if you just fly around the edges of the war zone, the war quite happily ticks over without you.

It's all let down by a terrible running speed though. On the highest detail, there's a noticeable delay between your action and the game's reaction, but on the lowest detail, you might as well be flying over a slightly lumpy pool table for all the feelings of realism you get.

Jet sims can get away with low ground detail because it's just a backdrop to dogfighting, but since the A-10's a ground attack plane and you're expected to stay below 400 feet, it all looks decidedly ragged. Also, because of the screen-delay, you end up over-compensating, flipping over and generally crashing just as it gets exciting, which is an obvious bad point. I can only assume that this was crudely ported from the PC with the intention of persuading flight-sim fans to buy a Pentium.

● CAM WINSTANLEY

THE BOTTOM LINE

Loads of good ideas are let down by the slow running speed and sluggish controls. The poor graphics swamp everything about A-10 Tank Killer.

41 PERCENT

ISHAR 2

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200
Publisher: Daze
Price: £13
Release: Out now

This second game in the Ishar trilogy is the one that the Hesiodic Theogeny that is AMIGA POWER favoured with the highest score. Jonathan Davies awarded the A500 version 79% in AP28, praising it for its sensible role-playing game engine and fine mountain views.

Nearly two years later it arrives on budget, at a quite reasonable £13; considering the large quantity of disks involved. The price is the same for both the version ordinaire and the enhanced AGA one which are both released together, so check the box carefully before you buy.

Ishar 2 is a straightforward first-person-perspective role-playing game wherein you assemble a mighty band of thieves, warriors and wizards to rid the land of the (sadly heavily clichéd) 'veil of darkness' that has swept over it. In true sequel style the villain from the first game has returned and threatens the peaceful land once more. Basically, it's just another tedious, unimaginative plot which is there simply to justify you and your kicking a lot of butt.

The game works very well with a usable interface that makes the usual sharing of money, drinking of potions and equipping of weapons easy to do.

The graphics are all quite splendid, and have a great sense of depth lent to them by the fact that objects in the far distance are only seen murkily. The storyline, although rather loose and perhaps even a trifle rambling, holds together well enough.

● STEVE FARAGHER

THE BOTTOM LINE

If you like role-playing games then you'll probably like this. There, I've said it and I'm unrepentant. However I think Jonathan over-rated it a little when he originally reviewed it.

69 PERCENT

ROME AD92

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200
Publisher: Kixx
Price: £15
Release: Out now

Ever felt lowly and insignificant? And yet always been convinced you could be something so much better? If so, then Rome AD92 is definitely a game you will be able to relate to.

Sort of. You won't want to play it, because it's not very good, but at least you'll be able to sympathise with your character as he runs around the screen desperately trying to get on to the next level.

You see the trouble with the game is it's just too boring. The idea is that your character Hector, starts off as a slave and through a series of adventures (levels) you progress through the ranks of society to the dizzy heights of Emperor. A task and a half, as you can appreciate. You do this by simply figuring out what tasks need to be completed and then what to do next.

All this takes place in a forced perspective view similar to Syndicate. But without the detail. You very basically 'interact' with people, simply saying hello or asking them what they do. And when you're able to do something else you'll notice a new option in one of the boxes.

It's pretty simple to get off the first level, but then you start noticing that you're not getting enough information about what's going on and the game quickly descends into you wandering around hoping you bump into someone or something that will lead you on to the next bit.

The game's also very linear, made more annoying by the fact that it leads you to explore the level thinking that lots of things are going on. Which they simply aren't.

There's little to recommend about Rome AD92, it's all quite nicely put together but a lot more thought needs to be put into a game like this, giving you lots of options and strategies to formulate. This doesn't provide anywhere near enough depth or excitement

● PAUL MELLERICK

THE BOTTOM LINE

Nice plot. But there's no intrigue or depth to the gameplay, making it methodical, slow and frankly uninteresting.

Finding the golden game needle in the haystack of the Public Domain is a tricky job. One Paul Mellerick is more than a match for. Ha! He wishes, the sad truth is, Paul is the only one gullible enough to do the job month in and month out. Sucker!

AQUANAUT

F1 Licenceware

Now, this is more like it. Very professional indeed. It's a simple idea – just wander around the (extremely big) level, finding gaps or blowing holes in things to make gaps in order to complete the level and move on to the next one. Simple, but fun.

You start with a fairly basic weapon, but that's not too much of a problem because there aren't that many things around to destroy. Well, things that fly towards you anyway. There are plenty of stationary or wall-mounted attackers and then there's that old friend of ours, the hidden missile. Which you never notice until you're directly above and it's about to hit you. Ouch!

It's a damn slow game to play, and it'll take you some time to actually get your head around what's going on. But the game rewards your thinking and in no time at all you'll be running around the levels at great speed. There are plenty of power-ups and things to collect and it's not very often you see a well-thought-out AND interesting idea all rolled into one.

THE BOTTOM LINE:

Quite slow, and you do have to be rather methodical as you play it, but after a few goes you're really into the swing of things in what can only be described as a thinking shoot-'em-up. ★★★★★

A map.

Spiky things block your progress. Shoot at them and then blow them up. Please. Aw, go on.

It's that Space Invaders feeling all over again.

F1 Licenceware

Yeah, so Blast 'em is an AMOS game. But you know the old saying 'Never judge a game by its programming tool'. Well, don't worry because this is actually quite good. It's a single screen shoot-'em-up with 50 levels, loads of varied, er, things to shoot and lots (and lots) of action.

You've got a traditionally small and under-powered spaceship which must take out all the level baddies before you can move on. Some of the things you take out will drop little yellow things which, in the unrealistic world of the shoot-'em-up, will enable you to power-up to some meatier hardware.

It's all been done before, but there are some nice touches that make this worth playing.

For a start, the action never lets up, over 50 levels. There are some very clever patterns to learn and, thanks to the four continues you get, you can always get that little bit further, but you're going to have to be really good to finish the game.

It's a good blast, and one of those games that will brighten up many a rainy Sunday afternoon. And if that horrible little cliché doesn't make you run out and buy it, then I don't know what will.

THE BOTTOM LINE:

Imaginative, playable, fast and fun. And cheap as well. A game for the '90s. If you see what I mean. ★★★★★

Blimey! That's a big rock.

INFECTION, TOOBZ & CONFUZION

17 Bit

Three games on one disk and proof positive that games don't have to be big to be good. Confuzion is the worst – a horrible slidey puzzle thing and it's got a 'z' in the title. The other two though are rather good.

Infection is one of those games that stops you working all morning and then means you have to rush all afternoon.

Four players (any combination of computer or human players allowed) try their best to cover the board in their chosen colour by infecting the adjacent square and taking over other colours. You can even jump two squares at the expense of vacating the square you were on, and there are special infecting pads that infect a whole strip (vertically or horizontally) with your colour. The computer opponents are clever and you can even have a little tournament.

Toobz is another puzzle game, and this time it's pretty hard right from the off. Using moveable junctions and tubes you must guide the right number of coloured balls into the appropriate slots before the time runs out. Put the wrong ball in a slot and you pay a time penalty, drastically reducing your chances of success. You have to do some quick thinking and though it's a bit daunting at the start, you soon get the hang of it. Try it yourself. It's on the coverdisk. So's Infection come to that. We're too good to you, aren't we?

THE BOTTOM LINE:

Two pretty good games and a rather poor one.

Infection – ★★★★★½

Toobz – ★★★½

Confuzion – ★½

JUMP 'EM

17 Bit

Ah, it's puzzly jumpy around time again, is it? Still, this is a fun little brain teaser, and even if it's not exactly the most original game this month it's still a nice one.

The idea is to progress from level to level by jumping on and then off the tiles. You have to get from one end to the other and make sure all the tiles have disappeared before you can take on the next (and generally harder) level.

Of course, there are tiles that need more than one jump before they dissolve away and you're hindered by the fact that you can only jump one square at a time and only in an up, down, left or right direction. There's a password for every level, so you don't get tired of the same easy level and in traditional puzzle game style the game starts off easy and er, well it gets harder.

THE BOTTOM LINE:

Fast and playable, but in the end it's not very original and there's not all that much to it. Good, though. ★★★

WHO? WHERE? HOW?

Once more we come to the end of another selection of games. And again you might want to actually try some of these yourself, unless you doubt the might of AMIGA POWER that is. So if you want to know more contact F1 Licenceware on (01392) 493580 or try 17 Bit on (01704) 834335. And tell them we sent you.

DO THE write thing

This month sees the arrival of possibly the most frightening 'press release' we've ever received, a long-standing mystery that nears a solution and a thousand and one (well, nearly) other things that are at once mystical, funny and deeply profound.

● Address your letters to: Do The Write Thing, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW. Or 'netsurf' us at: ampower@futurenet.co.uk.

"MYSELF AND IZZY"

Right, it's official. Myself and Izzy Rees are joining forces. All tremble in fear. We are even more powerful than the Four Cyclists of the Apocalypse!

Ludwig Ledbury
pl@soton.ac.uk

Urghh. What a terrible way to start this month's correspondence. Rest assured, after this terrifying vision, things can only get better.

"BEARDED SHOPKEEPER WAVED"

Since June 1991, I've been getting my Amiga games from a little shop in Wimborne Road called Caltec. (Actually, that's where Andy Davidson programmed Team 17's Worms.) But when I went in there earlier today, Mr Bearded Shopkeeper waved a "Closing Down Due to Amiga Market" message at me. Apparently they've been losing money as everyone else has been shopping in the big stores in Bournemouth. Damn. I would like to say that you readers out there should support your local Amiga store.

Yours Andrew Crane, Bournemouth.

Yes. Even if the shopkeeper has a beard.

"MUSHY AFTER PLUMMETING"

Oh Dear AP,
I've just noticed the spine message on AP42, and you got it wrong! The Jerry Lewis/Clown character in Animaniacs actually said "I wish the ground were mushy and soft" rather than "I wish the ground were soft and mushy" after plummeting from the top of the Warner Brothers Tower. I suppose that was J Nash's idea. Yours nit Pickingly, Cheltenham

Perhaps. But at least we wouldn't have, say, typed a letter and then forgotten to sign it, leaving an embarrassing blank bit on the page. For example. Chew humility, foul pedant.

"MEATY BLOKE BATTERED"

Dear AP,

I wish you to know that I got up and walked out of Stargate, a bit after the big meaty bloke battered about four marines. Yours Andy Elliot, Manchester

You see, we are ALWAYS RIGHT. Pray that the rumoured sequels never emerge.

"HAVE TO INSULT SOMETHING"

Dear AP,
Having read AP47, I felt moved to write this short script which, I hope, may one day be made into a film and hailed as a timeless classic that will survive the test of time and prove to be a work of genius: SCENE: A darkly lit room, heavy with smoke and filled with wild-eyed magazine journalists in the middle of a heated debate.

Journo 1: Look, face facts, the deadline's tomorrow and we still don't have a main feature.

Journo 2: I know, we could do a feature-length joystick review.

Journo 1: Nope. Done that.

Journo 3: How about proclaiming ourselves to be superior to anything else on Earth or, indeed, the whole galaxy?

Journo 1: Nope, done that. Come on, think, we need something new and exciting.

Journo 2: Er... Well then, we're going to have to insult something.

Journo 1: Like what?

Journo 3: Other magazines?

Journo 1: Old news.

Journo 2: Publishers?

Journo 1: Bought the T-shirt and worn it several times in public.

Journo 3: Well then that only leaves our readers, but how?

Journo 2: We could condemn them to the eternal fires of HELL if they even think of cheating.

Journo 1: Then, erm, we could give them 14 pages of cheats cunningly disguised as hints and tips.

Journo 3: I like it. It's brilliance bordering on genius, no, it's divine intervention. (He leans over and gives each of the others a big kiss on the forehead.)

I think this emphasises my point sufficiently. I thank you.

Patrick Marriott, Rossendale

That'll teach us to print a whole bundle of cheats in an original and entertaining manner. Next time we'll type them out in columns. On a black-and-white page maybe.

"I SUGGEST 'THRUTCH'"

Czen dobre,
Now that the deep, mystical thingies hidden in the word 'hatch' have at last been revealed, how about a new round of 'guess the word?' I suggest 'thrutch.'
Prosze jeden bilety na Warsawa Centralna,

Steve Bosanko
S.Bosanko@east-anglia.ac.uk

That'd better not mean anything rude. We'd hate to upset our sizable Polish-reading public.

"CHEAPER TO SHIP"

Dear AP,
Here I am, writing to you once again from the past and yet, paradoxically, from the present AT THE SAME TIME. Just because it's cheaper to ship magazines to New Zealand, I have to be three or four months behind the times. This is why I've only just found out about Sensi's soon-to-be departure from Amiga games (muffled sob). Say it ain't so, Jops. Why, if it wasn't for the climate, pollution-free environment and low crime rate, I might almost regret being a kiwi.

Josh Addison, Auckland

"CHARMINGLY SNEERING"

To be honest I'm slightly shocked and stunned. The self-confessed technophobes at AP actually have a net page on that delightful Futurenet thing. At least it's in the charmingly sneering and domantrix (Do you mean dominatrix? Hopefully not. - Ed) style we're all used to. The Net's far to polite by half, matey.

And another thing (quite suitable for Bottom Line inclusion and (even better) for flogging a few more of your sweatshirts for female-starved cyber-Amiga-junkies): I lay claim to being the first person ever to pull in an AMIGA POWER sweatshirt. In Indie-rock circles wearing such an obviously ironic garment to a sweaty nightclub increases your pulling power manyfold. And better yet it's light enough to dance in all night without getting unsightly 'water' rings. Truly the AMIGA POWER sweatshirt is the garment nine out of ten casanovas prefer. A Garment of Champions.

Thanks,
C-Monster
bs4kmg@bath.ac.uk

We have since discovered that C-Monster's real surname isn't Monster at all, but (we're led to believe) Dillen. Team 4 1/2's finest is (we are told) a first year Biology student at Bath University. More details as we lawlessly and covertly unearth them.

"GREETED BY AN 'OHHHHH' SOUND"

Dear AP,
Here is my opinion on Sensi leaving the Amiga... ("The flip" - Ed) they are!

Sensi games only EVER do well on the Amiga. Cannon Fodder for example: it bombed on the consoles (no mouse = hard game), it did not sell on the PC (it was reduced to £19.99 within two days of release in our local games shop). Sensi Soccer is another example. On the consoles they hate it (FIFA is king of the consoles) and on the PC they hate it (none of this arcade action stuff, adventures only). Again, only on the Amiga did it sell in volume. (If not, why did they release the Amiga version first?) Repeat the above for all Sensi games.

Now, the reason they gave for leaving was PIRACY. I must say at this point that I do not pirate games as I am fortunate enough to be able to afford them. HOWEVER, a 14 year old kid who has been saving for the past month is not going to buy a game which is sooooo HARD that he will never see past level 8 phase 3. (Say. For example.)

I bought Cannon Fodder for 25 of your new pounds when it came out and have not yet got past level (you guessed it) 8 phase 3. What is the point of the game being sooooo hard that most players are denied access to 3/4 of the levels? And Cannon Fodder 2 is supposed to be harder...

I also bought SWOS. Being an owner of Sensi already, I found the game almost impossible to play. There is only one way to score and that is standing near the goal line to one side and curling the ball in. What the hell is the point in this? In the original you could be inventive and score some wicked goals. In this one, every time you try something new you are greeted by an "ohhhhh" sound. (And why is it not HD installable?)

Thus, in summing up: ("Kiss" – Ed) off Sensi, you will not be missed. Games that are way too hard are just plain old unplayable, not smart and certainly not clever.

However, I fear we shall not be so lucky. The whole thing about Sensi leaving was, I suspect, just a publicity stunt by Stu to get us to buy their games over the Christmas period.

Ali Tavassoli
ch2091@bristol.ac.uk

"THEN THERE WAS ANOTHER ONE"

Could you stop the following jokes please?

1. The 'natch' joke, where readers write in to give their opinions on what it means, despite the fact that it's bloody obvious.
2. The 'Stuart Campbell – Who?' joke.
3. The sequels joke, where you say "First there was this game, then there was another one of it, etc."

Yours effervescingly,
Jonathan Sacramento, Gibraltar

We already have. Now all we've got to do is think of some new ones.

"DUALITY OR SIMPLE PERVERSION? DISCUSS"

Dear Mr Write-Thing,
I won't bother young Dick Pelley with the solution to Dimitri Buytoert's Beneath A Steel Sky problem as he'll probably be literally buried, many years from now after a full and active life, and will certainly have many, many BASS solutions to cope with in the immediate future.

However, on the subject of BASS, I played this on CD32 because I wanted the speech – I know you look down your collective noses at this feature in point-and-clickers, but I poke a singular finger up one of your collective nostrils. I thought it added greatly to the atmosphere and I'll strip to the waist and wrestle any woman who says differently.

I thought BASS was a very nice game, and nicely designed too. Fluid interface, an intro that felt connected with the game, no eye watering, awkward, can't refer to it when you're playing 'manual on disk' (how bitter with life, how full of malevolence and self-loathing is a person who puts the manual on disk? Really?). Okay, I was initially curious as to why the central character, Rob, was wearing a dress, but I soon took this to be a symbolic reflection on the identity confusion that drives him through the plot. (Incidentally, Guybrush wears a rather attractive evening gown in Monkey Island 2. "Cross dressing as a personality facet in modern point-and-click heroes – The semiotics of duality or simple perversion? Discuss. Two and a half hours.")

Anyway, hark – once merely a

AP SWEATSHIRT winner

"VACUUM CLEANER, OKAY?"

Dear DTW Thing,
My vacuum cleaner is cack. "Just HOW cack is your vacuum cleaner then?" My vacuum cleaner, right, is so cack, the "1000 Watt extra powerful suction" so manifestly not up to any vacuum cleaner-type task, that rather than VACUUMING the carpet, I have to pick up every piece of fluff/scrap of paper/non-specific brown thing found lying on the carpet by hand, and feed each one individually up the nozzle. Now that, in my book, is what I call a cack vacuum cleaner, okay?

It takes me 45 minutes to 'vacuum' each room because I have to use my fingers and what is, in effect, basically nothing more than a huge, noisy, expensive, electricity consuming carrier bag. Bugger. Were it not for this fact, I would have been able to complete an earlier letter to you.

What I had meant to write about was the abysmally substandard state of Amiga magazines, whose horridness is twofold. The first fold I shall daringly call (1).

(1) This is a near total lack of writing ability. Sloppy, cliché-saturated, grammatically obscene, dull nonsense fills 80% of the magazines.

Any enthusiasm for the game being reviewed is swamped beneath the urge to secretly vomit into the reviewer's coat pockets, so he wouldn't know about it until the next day, when he'd casually reach for change, by which time the sick would be cold. For example. Where do they get these people? They may be wizards with a joypad but, as sure as we know a Hammer film will end with a fire, we know they spent their English lessons having board rubbers thrown at them. The next fold, with a pixie-ish sparkle in my eye, I'll dub (2).

(2) This is much more serious. It is pure idleness. The quality of the magazine is such that they've never bothered to check it, with screen grabs too dark or too blurry or from a different game entirely. You squint, and twist the page, and are still unable to tell whether it's a grab of that new game, or merely a polaroid of something which recently fell out of the writer's nose. The whole thing speaks of slovenly, couldn't-care-less production. I can only assume that all Amiga users, like me, lust after news and data ("Doctor, I constantly lust after news." "I'm afraid you're an infomaniac") to a degree which supports them.

It's obvious that I don't include AP with these abominations; everyone makes the odd mistake and no-one can completely control what happens at the printers, but the attention to detail you put in is apparent. Equally, though, someone tells you every month that you're not as good as you were and you were never as good as the people who came before you anyway, and though you may all be frighteningly ugly individuals, your writing abilities are evident. Amiga Format, which, let's face it, is merely peopled with your cast-offs and followers, is also very good. My glances at PC Format appear to reveal a creeping AP hegemony too, incidentally. Are you slowly seizing Future Publishing from within? (Yes. – Ed) Most of the other Amiga mags, though, are truly emetic.

You may wonder – supposing that at this point in the letter you still have the will to live – why I'm writing all this to you. Well, I could write to every other magazine individually, but I know they all read yours anyway. So, if you publish the most coherent parts of this, it'll reach them all in one master stroke. Perhaps then they might try a bit harder, and employ people who don't need help to dress themselves. Then, although AP will undoubtedly still wear the crown, beneath you we'll have an impressive court of magazines to delight the public.

Or perhaps not.

Officer Dibble, Wolverhampton
*In his 1874 book 'Responsibility for Mental Disease', Dr Henry Maudsley said a tendency to make puns was a sure sign of insanity. I tell you that for no extra charge.

shimmering dot on the horizon, I think I now hear the weary footfalls of the point of this letter approaching. Enter, friend. Although good as a game, BASS locked up well over a dozen times while trying to load backgrounds, or did load them but was so bugged after doing so that I had to reset anyway. Now, this could be my CD32, but I have no trouble with any other games, so I think not.

The nature of P-and-Cs means that much changing of location is involved: sitting in sweaty terror at every move is something I heartily thank the game's producers for. Not knowing if you'll be forced to reload at every move – now that's tension. This sort of thing could perhaps be extended. Perhaps when you buy a game, 30% of the time you should just get blank disks and no refund. Perhaps every tenth customer who buys a game could be set upon outside the shop by hired thugs wearing sinisterly inappropriate Mardi Gras masks and wielding socks full of heavy, foreign coins.

Perhaps even, every time a game's shoddy quality control provokes you to blaspheme, you should buy a few beers for your brother-in-law's shady mates. Perhaps they could steal into the producer's house in the cold, still early hours, drag them babbling and confused from their silk-sheeted beds, and rub stupidly large amounts of wood glue into their underarm hair.

I did mean to mention something else, but my girlfriend informs me that if I do not stop now and do the vacuuming that she will injure me really quite badly. Another time, maybe.

Yours, better for that,
Al Rico, Wolverhampton

It's a scary thought. The next thing we know, programmers will be devising power-ups that reverse your controls.

"GITS"

Right, a quick glance at the Amiga Charts on the Future WWW page reveals that Sensible Software hold No.1 with Sensible WOS, No.3 with Cannon Fodder and, er, No.19 with Cannon Fodder 2. Now are you seriously telling me that Sensible are giving up all that money? SWOS will be No.1 for ages, and will still be selling in 2 years. Oh hang on. "Still be selling in 2 years." Yes. That's it. They're not going to do anything, just sit and live off SWOS. And drive their Porsches. What a bunch of gits.

Ludwig
pl@soton.ac.uk

Go away.

"RAMBLINGS OF AN INCONTINENT"

Dear Mr Power,
Now we've all heard a great deal about

Power Mac™ and the Power PC™ and the latest Amiga Format has some Cyber-Techno-Junkie-Egghead waxing lyrical about the next generation Amigas that he isn't working on anymore. Now let's imagine, just for one moment, that these mythical machines were to be christened (oh so originally) Power Amigas™. Would this mean our beloved AP would retitle itself PAP? While we're fantasising here, what if it were renamed (Phoenix-like) the Commodore RISC Amiga™? Would your hallowed magazine turn to CRAP? (Snigger.) No, let's leave that sort of thing to ("Michael Jackson" – Ed) and ("Current Bun" – Ed), as they seem to be doing a darn good job of it.

Recent issues – Your SCUM feature was inspired, and your in-game music thing was a work of genius. Not too sure about the dinosaur thing, though. Er... (I'm struggling now)... AP is truly wonderful... Cam is great... Rich Pelley looked like Professor FJ Lewis in AP47 (intentional, I presume).

Sorry, I'm losing it (whatever 'it' is). My letter is now suffering from the fact that the entire purpose in writing was fulfilled in the first paragraph, leaving nothing but incoherent ramblings of an incontinent buffoon to smear across the Kleenex Quilted™ surface of your letters page, and we all know that incoherent ramblings consisting of a sentence more than 79 words are in fact another TOOL OF

THE ORIGINAL SERPENT, THE LIAR AND THE FATHER OF THE LIE. Are they not?

By the way, my puppy (George) is exactly 16 weeks old today, so could you send her a card, or just say hello – I'm sure she'd appreciate it. It might even help to cure her diabolical wind problem. Maybe not, she can't read yet. Or can she? Or CAN she? OR CAN SHE?

Anyway, nice chatting with you,
Kevin Evans, Derby

And with the words "Hello George", Kevin's misleadingly-named puppy joins Bob the Hamster in the AP Hall Of Misgendered Pets.

"IT WAS ACTUALLY USED"

Dear AMIGA POWER,
I would just like to say your mag is easily the best of the bunch. It's more informative and enjoyable to read. I do have a few criticisms though. Frontier and Tower Assault are brilliant games. I'm sorry, but as the Readers Top 100 showed, most Amiga owners think the same way about Frontier too. It seems the Amiga is about to be swamped by Doom wannabes. I saw a demo of Alien Breed 3D in ("Michael Jackson" – Ed) (sorry, but I just had to see the demo) and it looked brilliant. The graphics were a bit blocky but it moved at a brilliant pace. This could well be a Doom beater if the game plays as good as it looks and moves. It does prove the A1200 is more than capable of running games of that calibre. It's about time id software (or at least somebody buying the rights) did a conversion.

You haven't really said much about LightWave 3.5. I know you're technically a games mag, but it was no doubt the biggest thing for the Amiga in 1994. I've heard it was actually used for the special effects in Babylon 5 and Sea Quest DSV. Is this true?

Oh, and Stargate was completely crap. Wooden acting, badly executed plot, predictable story line, diabolical gibber basically. Some kids actually cheered when it finished. Anyway that's about it really,
Richard Cotton
ndca4206@zuse.brklands.demon.co.uk

LightWave 3. what? Eh? What the blithering heck are you on about?

"BYE, STUPID"

Dear AP,
What is it with the AP letters page and cretinous morons? I mean, in AP45, we had Androgynous Pirate, the moron who can't afford games and so steals them. What logic. What a guy.

Then in AP46, Stupid Ford wrote in ("No the Amiga are best") asking for an apology for his stupidity. Well Stupid, here it is: I'm sorry that you are a cretin. Thanks. He's not buying AP again, so he won't be reading this. Bye, Stupid.

Then we had Limpid Boyle, the bloke who hasn't read an Amiga magazine which deals with printers. Hasn't he read Amiga Format, or seen the adverts in EVERY SINGLE issue of AP? Oh, and Limpid, what's the point of telling people not to buy an Amiga? Don't you think that most AP readers might just own an Amiga? Cretin.

So Limpid, Stupid and Androgynous, stop writing and save space for funny readers, like Steve Bosanko and Isabelle Rees! See ya, Michael Bester, Newcastle

"DEEPLY OFFENDED"

I'd better stop then, eh? Heh.

Lud
pl@soton.ac.uk

Annoyed by Ludwig yet? Console yourself that this is merely a fraction of the tedious waffle that diurnally drenches our Ethernet Gateway. Why not start your own Ludwig backlash by 'flaming' Lud over the 'Net'? You'd be doing us a favour.

"A GOOD SLAPPING"

Hi.
Right my friends. Let's take this slowly. There are bad covers. Then there are awful covers. Then there's The AP Dawn Patrol cover. It's ("Bright" – Ed) comrades, and the artist will be among the first against the wall "Come the Revolution". I mean, a big black page with "DAWN PATROL!" on it would have been better. Or just a plain page with "BUY ME – I CONTAIN INFO ON TOP AMIGA GAMES" would have been superior. Just don't go back to the Mark Ramshaw age Covers, as if you do I'll have to pop round and give you all 'A Good Slapping'.

On the other hand, the actual contents were much better. Yet again you move to reclaim your greatness which you temporarily lost under the metaphorical sofa last month. Go Figure. Love, Peace and Haggis,
C-Monster.

You're entirely wrong. Apart from the last bit. Apart from the very last bit.

"A SUBSCRIPTION?"

Dear AP,
£40 for a subscription? You've been conned and no mistake. Look what I found in Amiga Format ish 63 (page 160, fact fans) (The picture top right. – Ed). Yours My district is Ayrshire, not Ayreshire as you printed in AP47, Colin 'Menzo' Meney

"STARGATE IS ENJOYABLE"

Dear AP,
I agree with you that Sensible World of Soccer is (one of) the best game(s) ever. And those who snivel and whine about it being too difficult should just PRACTISE MORE INTENSIVELY. TO GET BETTER. One small question though...

Why does there only seem to be one crowd chant in SWOS on the A500? Wherever I play in the world, the same monotonous chant recurs – DESPITE being informed by Sensible Software in their many advertisements for the game that there were 'authentic' chants (note plural) from around the world.

Is there an explanation? Or are Sensible Software merely THIEVES, CHEATS and LIARS? If you don't know, perhaps you could make use of the apparently symbiotic and rather disturbing relationship that you appear to enjoy with Stuart Campbell at Sensi and get HIM to answer. Please?

By the way – Stargate is enjoyable precisely because it's so bad! The kitschy sets; the characters, seemingly extracted from the blood of a fossilised 1950s screenwriter (absent-minded but brilliant scientist, tough marine with a 'past', token native love interest etc...); the 'back of a cereal packet' theories about the origin of civilisation – altogether they make this the best 'comedy' of 1995. (Apart from the laughably camp and narcissistic 'Interview With The Vampire' – but that was written in the '70s so it's got an excuse.)

On an interrogative note once again: I DEMAND to know which of you have the ability to 'do' those Magic Eye things. And are there any 3D games on the Amiga? (That are any good, that is.) I just wondered, that's all.

Keep up the 'good' work.
Simon Delamare
ec94sjd@brunel.ac.uk

The SWOS thing is something to do with hardware limitations. Stargate? YOU ARE WRONG. It is NOT "enjoyable precisely because it's so bad". Timecop was bad-but-enjoyable. Watching Stargate is like sitting in a dentist's chair for two hours without an anaesthetic. And Interview With The Vampire wasn't much better. As for 'Magic Eyes', we have a theory that they're merely an elaborate hoax, and no-one can actually 'do' them at all. Anyone who claims they can is merely afraid of appearing inferior.

"OH NO! SOMETHING TERRIBLE"

Dear AP,
I was just filling in the AMIGA POWER Reader Survey when I noticed in one of the questions something about "an average issue of AMIGA POWER". But surely there's no such thing. Each issue is unique in its own special way. I mean, average according to you is worthy of 50%. Utter baloney. Average issue of AMIGA POWER. I ask you.

Oh no! Something terrible just happened. I've joined the group of sad individuals who have nothing better to do than drivel on all day about how great AP is. Surely you don't need this sort of thing. The fact that you know you are the elite should be enough. Shouldn't it?

Hair, Team 4 1/2, Stafford

No. We may be intellectual giants, but that doesn't mean we're not suckers for shameless toadying.

AND ANOTHER THING..

Dear Geoffs,
No! I must not succumb to the rapture of warm bread.
Dale 'Dimrill' Bird

When all this Satan business has come to an end, how about basing things around bathroom products and appliances? You know, like "You foul black flannel of death, hung on the side of the horned god BATHMAT's wash basin itself." Or not.

STUPENDOUS TALES

The BEHIND MEN

STUPENDOUS TALES #417
AN EDUCATIONAL COMICS PUBLICATION

"I realise my life is probably forfeit for disseminating this essential information," muttered Bill as he sat down in the dark, smoky room, "but my story must be told." He laid a cheap briefcase on the table before the Other, who settled back comfortably in his chair, leaning out of the pool of light cast by the overhead lamp.

"Everyone's heard the legend of the Behind Men, of course," continued Bill, mopping at his brow with a handkerchief. "I still remember being frightened as a child by my grandmother, but that's another story. It was Uncle Edwin who first told me of the sinister agents who engineer the world's disasters for their own secret ends. I paid no attention to him, naturally, as a man will say anything when being dragged to the gallows, but his last words lay in my mind like an ulcer in a stomach." Bill all at once shrieked inhumanly, waved his limbs violently and made a sound like he was trying to clear his throat of cotton wool. "An

"A country's elected leader falling for a clear trick that wouldn't fool a four-year-old child? The Behind Men and their fiendish fibre-impregnating chemical compounds."

"I now believe the entirety of the Second World War was brought about in order to speed development of the atomic bomb."

"It seems incredible that the Sepoy Mutiny actually took place when it was so obviously doomed to failure – until you realise the Behind Men engineered the rising, designing it specifically to collapse Anglo-Indian relations in the long term."

epitaph like that stays with you for a very, very long time, believe me."

He opened the briefcase and produced a crumpled newspaper cutting. It showed the sinking of the Lusitania. He smoothed it out and placed it on the table, then put another piece of paper beside it. "Two years ago I was researching a story on naval disasters when I came across this photograph. Something in it jarred, and I had the picture enlarged. This is what had caught my attention." He turned over the second paper. It showed a figure standing in one of the lifeboats. The figure felt wrong, approximating a human being but shimmering beneath the eye, inexplicably sliding away from close examination. "It's exactly as Uncle Edwin described them," said Bill, his voice deadly quiet, as the Other shifted uneasily in his seat. "This is a Behind Man."

"Once I knew what I was looking for, things became terrifyingly easy. The Behind Men are everywhere." He shook out a sheaf of photographs from the briefcase.

"Wherever you look in recent history, they're there, in the background, manipulating events and overseeing the terrible effects. I've no doubt they've been operating for hundreds of years – if you examine contemporary reports of everything from the murder of Edward II to the Krakatoa explosion, there's invariably mention of an unknown onlooker who mysteriously vanishes before

"Ruby himself was unable to explain satisfactorily why he had so violently prevented Oswald from speaking the truth."

magazine cutting from his inside pocket. The page showed the Behind Men

"A clear day? An experienced pilot? The Behind Men."

"A classic Behind Men plan. They start by coercing friends to fight, then move on to influencing groups, and before very long they're making you think what a great idea it would be to ignore your flight sim-approved target and carpet-bomb civilian areas instead."

"Again, what history tells us is laughable. Rasputin charmed the tsarina with his supposed powers of control over her son's haemophilia? Rubbish. The Behind Men besmirched the reputation of the royal family, encouraging their assassination and the rise of Lenin."

he can be questioned – but it's only with the invention of photography that we've been able to place them at the scene. Look at these." He collected the scattered papers and dealt them out like cards. The Behind Men loomed up from each one, unnoticed by onlookers, orchestrating events to a higher agenda. Bill hurled the last photograph across the table, the Other catching it deftly as it slapped at his chest.

"There's more," moaned Bill, his head in his hands. "The Ghandi assassinations – Russia – Los Angeles – they all bear the marks of the Behind Men. And now they're moving into a new dimension." He cast glances about himself, and drew a rolled-up manipulating the denizens of the virtual universe. He looked across at the Other. "That's my story. It may already be too late, but if I can use your newspapers to disseminate the facts, we may yet stop them. What do you say?"

The Other leaned forwards into the light for the first time, fixing Bill with a penetrating stare, his clammy skin shiny in the light. "I say, Mr Klee, look behind you. No, only joking. Of course I'll get my editors to print the story. Global coverage. We'll save the world yet."

And they did. But neither of them saw the shadow being cast across the planet... FROM BEHIND.
